“ My Lord, there is an essential difference between the motions by my Hon'ble friends Mr. Banerjea, Mr. Chanda and Mr. Khaparde and this motion. This motion does not want the republication of the Bill, it does not want its reference to the High Courts or the Local Governments or the various political bodies in the country, it does not want anything of that kind. On the contrary, it wants that the Bill be taken into consideration, but taken into consideration only when there is calm atmosphere in the country. To take into consideration a matter of so great an importance really requires, I venture to submit, a calm atmosphere. We have been for the last two years, or for a year and a half at any rate, hearing a good deal of the desirability of securing a calm atmosphere in India, and if such atmosphere is needed for the consideration of any problem, it is indeed so needed in this particular case which affects the liberties of 300 millions of people. But as it appears the majority of this Council has made up their minds to go on with the Bill, I would put this further argument that in a court of law the lawyers always say, when a Judge expresses an opinion regarding the guilt of the accused, the accused is entitled to apply for a transfer. So in this matter also from the various statements that have fallen from the Hon'ble the Home Member we have found that Government is determined to carry this measure through, and have expressed their opinion definitely regarding its merits. I therefore pray that this matter be not considered by this Council, but by the Council to come into existence in 1921. It is a reasonable request your Excellency will see, and this is so important a measure that when the majority of the Council have made up their minds, I ask that the matter be postponed and taken into consideration by the Council that will come into existence in 1921. We know that in 1920 the term of this Council will expire and the new Council will come into being in 1921. That will be a Council without an official block determined to carry the measure through. The representatives of the people will be on the Council, there will be at least two-thirds elective majority on it, and I daresay if they see any necessity for a measure of this kind they will pass it. I do not think I can usefully add anything more in support of this amendment, and I trust the Council will see its way to accept this modest amendment.”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ My Lord, the Hon'ble Member has described his amendment as a very modest one ; it appears to me however that he bases his statement chiefly on the fact that it is contained in three words—not in two words as he says,—the effect of which will be to postpone the consideration of this Bill for two years. As I have already tried to explain to the best of my ability to this Council, we consider this measure as one of great urgency, and much to our regret we had to decline to accept a motion from the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea to republish the Bill as this would have involved six or nine months delay in passing it. My Lord, in those circumstances, I think the Council can hardly expect the Government to accept a motion which postpones the consideration of the Bill for a period of two years and leave us for that period entirely powerless to cope with revolutionary crime of a very dangerous character.” 6-13 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ My Lord, the Hon'ble Member's reply is, I submit, rather a misleading one. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea's amendment was not for the purpose of postponing this measure. It was for the purpose of getting opinions from the High Courts and Local Governments and political associations. I want nothing of the kind. I say, let it be considered when calm atmosphere prevails. I want nothing more. With these words I would ask the Council to accept this amendment.” 6-14 P.M.

6-18 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—“The amendment which I have to put forward reads as follows:—

‘That the Bill be not taken into consideration until the Governor General in Council receives from Parliament an express authority by an Act of Parliament to pass it.’

“This raises an important question on which I touched when the Bill was introduced, but I naturally did not develop the argument then because the motion was that leave be given for the introduction of the Bill. Now I believe is the proper time to raise it. I raised it in the Select Committee and it was said I could not raise it there and this was the proper place. I wish to make the matter as untechnical as I possibly can. It is that India is something like a lady who suffered, at one time at any rate, from a great excess of wealth and excess of philosophy, and in the excess of philosophy she neglected to fight and forgot in course of time the art of war, and wealth naturally brought trouble, so Providence sent her younger sister from the West to help her and the younger sister said ‘I will look after your house and be your trustee and see you do not come to any harm; I will protect you from external aggression, keep internal peace and be a good sister.’ Then naturally the sister could not come over bodily, so she appointed officers or agents here. I suppose her most trusted officers, her best sons she gave us here, but she was not quite sure that her agents would not fall a prey to some temptation or other, so England said ‘Yes, you can manage these estates and so on, but there are certain fundamental things which I shall reserve to myself, and if you want to deal with these things you must come to me and take my permission before you do anything at all.' This is a story shortly told by me, but if we take away the figures of speech from it, it comes to this that our supreme Legislature is Parliament. I suppose no authority is needed for that statement. This Legislature in which I have the honour to sit at present is a subordinate Legislature. The English Legislature has no completely written basis; it is partly written and a great deal oral and traditional and based upon conventions and so on. Fortunately for us here we have our constitution entirely written and it goes into numerous Acts, but I need not trouble the Council with all of them. We will take the latest of them, that is the Government of India Act of 1915. The two sections that are most important in this Act are sections 32 and 65. I shall not deal with the questions under section 32 because they do not arise in this connection, but the question that arises here specifically is under section 65. I will read the proviso only:—

'Provided that the Governor General in Legislative Council has not, unless expressly so authorised by Act of Parliament, power to make any law repealing or affecting—

(i) Any Act of Parliament passed after the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty and extending to British India (including the Army Act and any Act amending the same).'

"That is the important part of it and the next portion is not essential. Then it goes on:—

'and has not power to make any law affecting the authority of Parliament, or any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom.'

"So the present legislation comes within the purview of both these clauses. It comes under Act of Parliament passed after the year 1860, and the Act on which I rely was passed in 1861, and it fulfils the condition of the proviso clause (i) which I have read. It also fulfils the condition that follows in clause (ii), namely, it affects the allegiance of the British subjects in India to the Crown. British subjects in India consist of two classes, Indian British subjects and what we usually call British born subjects; that is to say Englishmen born in England and bringing with them their personal law who have come here to settle down or do business and are regulated by this Act. Also Indian British subjects, that is to say Indians born in British India. I see from the preamble to this Bill that the Government have introduced that clause which usually does not appear—'whereas the previous approval of the Secretary of State in Council has been accorded.'

"That clause saves them from this part of it that they can legislate for British born subjects having got the consent of the Secretary of State. This is not usually put in, but it has come in, I suppose, to prevent British born subjects from raising a difficulty about it. But the real difficulty remains and that difficulty is that this law in so far as it directs that the liberties of a person will be taken away, and his property also by order of the executive, and directs further that no appeal shall lie about these matters, distinctly invades the legislation made by Parliament on the point usually called fundamental rights.

"It directs further that no appeal or suit shall lie about these matters. I say it distinctly invades the legislation made by Parliament on the point and also what we usually call fundamental rights. The fundamental rights are given by Mr. Dicey in his book, and even a very brief glance at English history will show that it was in the reign of King John that the Barons fought the matter out and made the monarchy what is called a limited monarchy. A limited monarchy means that the powers of the Crown are limited by the powers of the magistracy. The highest magistracy for Great Britain is the House of Lords and without the permission of the magistracy, the King could not arrest anybody nor take away his property, and so on. Those were the rights which came within the Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights that would turn upon this point, namely, that the liberties of a subject and his property shall not be taken away without a judicial sentence or without the decree or order of a proper Court. This law, the common law of England, is also a fundamental right that was given to the Indians. The Proclamation of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and subsequent Proclamations have conferred all these rights on British Indians, and these rights cannot be taken away by any piece of legislation passed by this Hon'ble Council. They would have to go to Parliament to get these rights reduced or curtailed in any way.

"Now, the first point that I wish to make is that such great importance is attached to this right in England that, even when there was imminent danger of invasion and the Defence of the Realm Act had to be passed, even then they did not touch this cherished right of Englishmen. The first article of the Defence of the Realm Act reads as follows :—

'The ordinary avocations of life and the enjoyment of property will be interfered with as little as may be permitted by the exigencies of the measures required to be taken for securing the public safety and the Defence of the Realm and the ordinary civil offences will be dealt with by the civil tribunals in the ordinary courts of law.'

This was passed in England at the time when there was imminent danger of invasion from without, and I believe some German spies had found their way into England and there was danger of trouble they were likely to cause. On the model of this Defence of the Realm Act the Defence of India Act was passed here, and we went much further than the Defence of the Realm Act went. Under the Defence of the Realm Act an Englishman could not be interned for more than six days from the day of his arrest. On the seventh day he has got to be produced before a Magistrate.....

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"May I interrupt the Hon'ble Member. I should be very grateful if he would give me the section of the Act which provides for that?"

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"I can do so if you will kindly give me a copy of the Act."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I have not got a copy with me. The Hon'ble Member has made a statement and I am only asking him to help me to verify it."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"I had the book with me, but unfortunately it was borrowed from me. There are, however, enough lawyers in this Council to remember that point. I remember it distinctly because I studied it very carefully. I mean that when a person is arrested, within seven days he has to be produced before a Magistrate and, as an Englishman he has the option of saying that he will be tried by a civil tribunal and that he shall not be tried by a court martial, and in that case he is tried by a civil tribunal, whereas the case of a foreigner is differently dealt with, and that is a matter with which I have no concern. In India, we British Indians, having those rights given to us, also say the same thing though not to that extent or to that degree. But we also say that our liberties and properties shall not be taken away unless by the sentence of an ordinary Court of the land, not by special tribunals nor by special procedures. Anyhow, the point is that we attach the same importance to these rights as are attached to them in England.

"Well, it is not an a priori argument that I am urging from books, but can support it by instances which I am able to quote. The first case on that point that came up and succeeded is the well-known Moment case which has already figured in the debates here. That was a case, I think, of land taken up by Government for various purposes; it may be under the Burma Land Acquisition Act; we are not concerned with the facts, but in that there was a provision that, with respect to that land or anything of that kind, no suit would lie against the Secretary of State. Mr. Moment who, I suppose, was properly advised, brought a suit which was rejected by the Court of first instance in

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Sir George Lowndes.]

Burma. Then he went to the Chief Court in Rangoon and the Judges there decided the case in his favour. Then the Secretary of State appealed to the Privy Council, and in the Privy Council the judgment of the Chief Court was affirmed, and it was said that the Local Government or the Government of India could not legislate so as to take away the right of a person to bring a civil suit against the Secretary of State. It is a very interesting matter and naturally fascinating. It appears that the question went before the House of Lords in connection with the Government of India Consolidation Act, and then there was a joint committee of the House of Lords and the House of Commons presided over by Chief Justice Lord Loreburn. By the kindness of the Home Department I got a glimpse of the report. It cannot be confidential because I found that it is partly reproduced in this book which I borrowed from your Excellency's library. That led me to it and the Home Department very kindly lent me that report to look at and then I took the liberty of making a few extracts so that I might be able to speak about them to your Excellency and this Hon'ble Council. It is very interesting and such members as feel inclined to go into this matter will kindly borrow that book and go through it. I will read out to your Excellency only a few sentences from what Lord Loreburn thought would happen if this piece of legislation was left unchallenged. He says:—

'In the Defence of India Criminal Act, 1915 (that is the Act with which we are more concerned than anything else because this Bill seems to perpetuate very largely the provisions of that Act) there is a clause saying that the judgment of the Commissioners shall be final and conclusive. It might be that the Commissioners might say that the Secretary of State for India had done right and then it might be pleaded that he had even been pronounced to have done right, and, therefore, he could not be sued at all.'

That is the kind of argument that would go on and this was the danger pointed out by Lord Loreburn. The arguments of Sir John Jardine whom from my childhood upwards I have learnt to respect very greatly as a great lawyer of Bombay.....

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I think my Hon'ble friend is confusing Sir John Jardine with Mr. James Jardine. Sir John Jardine was an Indian Civilian and a Judge, but was never a practising lawyer in Bombay."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"I am so sorry ; he used to be our examiner in the University. Sir John Jardine makes this observation, that 'it would protect the Secretary of State with regard to any tort, however grievous, to which he might have subjected a subject if he broke through these fundamental laws, put people under unjust Judges or let people buy their offices and then sit in judgment or anything of that kind, and an Act was passed to make that legal, he could validate that by future legislation.'

"He goes on to say what the consequences would be if such a thing were permitted. For this, they brought in a consolidation measure and in the consolidation measure they introduced a clause validating all these Acts that had been passed in India. There were as many as 30 of these Acts, in which this provision, which is said to be ultra vires, is repeated, after the Moment case. Before it there were as many as a hundred and more Acts containing the same or similar provision. All this, I submit, is unauthorized legislation. Lord Islington, the Under Secretary of State for India, admitted this at the time the Act was passed that it was a most inconvenient Act to pass, but that there were these 30 Acts to be dealt with. He made certain observations—I do not propose to read them ; but he went on to say that there may be this inconvenience and it may be a difficult thing to prevent all these inconveniences, the laws having been passed in that way and so on, but there is the old Latin proverb—I do not know Latin—but the proverb says that you have to do justice even if the heavens fall. You have got to admit that two and two do make four, no matter what the consequences of that may be. And so the Bill was justified.

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde.]

"I have only told this story because it touches on one point. In clause 41 of this Bill your Excellency will find that this matter of civil suits is brought in, and it is laid down that nobody is able to bring a civil suit against the Secretary of State. There has been one instance in which this power which is taken by the Bill was in question. This was a case about land; but I believe people value their liberties quite as much as their lands; and if property cannot be taken away by the Secretary of State or by a piece of legislation in this Council, neither can the liberties of the subject be taken away by a piece of legislation in this Council. Under the present law a person can be imprisoned or interned, which is, I suppose, another name for imprisonment, imprisonment in his own house or the house of a friend and sometimes in a jail. Whatever it is, it is there, and that is a curtailment of his liberty, and his property, namely, his papers and books, can be taken away. How are they to be taken away? Not by being produced before a Magistrate or Judge, but by the authority of the Local Government alone, and this is the part of that section to which great exception will be taken and is being taken now. Not that we do not recognise that the Local Government will act with the best of motives. We quite recognise that. We also recognise that the Local Government will do their best to see that no injustice is done. All that is true, but it does not save the Act from being difficult of acceptance. If we are merely to go by the motives which inspire people, I fully believe that those people who instituted the Inquisition believed, honestly believed, that they were doing good to the men whom they were punishing; but all the same the world is now agreed that they were wrong.

"Similarly, all this about the Government's honesty of purpose and so on is very commendable, but in my opinion—it is a humble opinion—that does not take away from the legal objection to the Act. And that objection is this. A man may be found to have committed a crime in the presence of a hundred people or a thousand people. Everybody knows about it, and yet the Government will not be right in getting hold of the man and hanging him at once. He will have to be taken before a Magistrate, properly tried and then punished. That is the right way. We go into the forests to shoot; yet there are laws of shooting; we do not take advantage of anything that would be 'unsportsman-like'—I think it is so called. So even a wicked man has to be punished but by rule and after a fair trial. But under this Act there is to be no trial; the man is not produced before any Magistrate or any Judge; there is no right of appeal. Those are other things about which I shall speak when the time comes. For the present my objection to this legislation is that it is beyond the competence of the Council to pass it. It is beyond their competence because it takes away the fundamental rights of a British Indian subject. It also takes away the fundamental rights of a British born subject. The difficulty that would arise in a case of this kind would be that, if this matter is not taken into serious consideration, it might happen that some one would take this case to the House of Lords, and then we should have a similar difficulty to that which arose in the Moment case to face. Nobody likes to lose a case. I should be very angry if I lost a case. And a repetition of the Moment case in a matter of this kind would lead to all sorts of difficulties.

"The next point to which I wish to refer and on which I wish to speak in some detail is this. The clause to validate legislation in India that was introduced was objected to by Lord Loreburn, by Sir John Jardine and by a number of Members. Ultimately it was dropped and the Government withdrew it with these words. I shall read from a printed book—it will be easier to read—not the exact words but the substance of it. The Under Secretary of State for India, Lord Islington, before moving that the House resolve itself into Committee said:—

'It may be convenient if at this stage I made a short statement informing your Lordships of the alterations that have been made.....Paragraph (d) of clause 2 has been omitted. The intention of this paragraph was to validate certain Indian enactments whose validity has recently been called into question by a decision of the Privy Council. Serious objection to this was raised by Chambers of Commerce and other bodies, both on the merits of the proposal and because it was urged that it was of such a universal character that it should not be inserted into the Bill at this juncture.

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

"The Joint Committee unanimously withdrew this paragraph from the Bill and eventually this paragraph was withdrawn. So the attempt that was made to legalise and to validate these provisions failed, and the Under Secretary of State for India had to withdraw those clauses and the law remains as it originally was. That is to say, it has been proved by a judicial decision in one case—and for the rest we have got to interpret the law in the light of that decision—it has been proved, I say, that no Act that we can pass in this Council can take away or curtail the fundamental rights, that is to say, rights of liberty or property, from individuals without a judicial sentence, without the case passing through the hands of Her Majesty's Judiciary and what are called the ordinary courts of the land, not by special tribunals and so on. It is in this view of the case, which I have endeavoured to put as briefly as I could and as popularly as I could, that this Bill which is now before us seems to me ultra vires, in so far as it seeks to substitute the executive for the judiciary. Your Excellency will find that in parts II and III the case of a person who is suspected is dealt with; the Local Government makes an order and then they send that order, I suppose, to what they call an investigating authority. The investigating authority generally is more or less an authority which is neither judicial nor executive. It is not judicial because it does not follow all the procedure laid down by law; also it pronounces no sentence; and it is not executive because it has got no power of its own; it does nothing of its own motion. Well, the Local Government submits some statements to that judicial investigating authority and, when they receive the reports of the investigating authority, they say 'the report looks all right; it is correct'; and then action is taken and the man arrested and detained and so on. This, I submit, is against the fundamental rights and the laws guaranteed to us by Royal Proclamations and by Acts of Parliament, more especially the Act of 1861. Then there is a further Act and the present Act of 1915 also does the same; and if any of those Acts are affected by this legislation, I submit it would be ultra vires. This is the proposition which I wish to submit for the consideration of this honourable Council. Of course I have not dealt with some of the legal and other aspects of the matter, but I have stated what I thought would be easily understood even by the people."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"My Lord, I only wish to intervene for the purpose of supplying information. The Hon'ble the Law Member said he wanted to know the section that Mr. Khaparde referred to. I think he probably referred to this, namely, the Amendment Act, 5 Geo. 5, c. 34, section 1 (2). I am not concerned with the relevancy of it at all."

6-48 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I am very grateful to the Hon'ble Member for the information. Will Mr. Khaparde accept the child that is fathered upon him?"

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"It says this: 'Where a person being a British subject but not being a person subject to the Naval Discipline Act or to military law is alleged to be guilty of an offence against any regulation made under the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914, he shall be entitled within six clear days from the time when the general nature of the charge is communicated to him to claim to be tried by a civil court with a jury instead of being tried by court martial or where such claim is made in the manner provided by the regulations, etc., etc.'"

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"That is the section I was referring to."

[Sir George Lowndes.]

[12TH MARCH, 1919.]

6-50 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, at this late hour of the evening I have no desire, whatever my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Khaparde, may have, of turning this Council Chamber into a court of law, and I entirely deprecate long legal discussions which in their proper place my Hon'ble friend will no doubt be able to elaborate. I propose to deal with this too very shortly as the motion is merely that this Council should defer passing this Bill until it has asked Parliament for special sanction to do it. Has any case been made out for that proposition? I say absolutely none whatever. In the first place, let me distinguish what seemed to me in my Hon'ble friend's argument to require distinction, that is to say, the argument which he wished to base on section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act, which as Hon'ble Members remember, deals with allegiance to the Crown and the arguments founded on the Moment case. For Heaven's sake let us take the Moment case out of the discussion. I assure this Council that it has nothing to do with the point. I can see no reason whatever for bringing it in except the not unusual anxiety of a lawyer to make a question appear more difficult than it really is. When we come to clause 41 of the Bill we can hear Mr. Khaparde on the Moment case. But let me assure the Council that the Moment case deals with civil law and has nothing whatever to do with criminal law. The Moment case is based on section 32 of the Government of India Act, which says that every person out here shall have the right of filing a civil action against the Secretary of State which he could have filed against the East India Company. It has nothing whatever to do with criminal proceedings. In Heaven's name I say let us get that out of the way. It has got nothing whatever to do with this motion.

"The point that Mr. Khaparde has raised is exactly the point that he raised the other day when this Bill was first before the Council, and which I then attempted to answer, namely, that this is a Bill touching the liberty of the subject, and that as touching the liberty of the subject it touches his allegiance to the Crown within the meaning of section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act. Well, I spoke on this last time. I have not the faintest intention of repeating my arguments. I had the satisfaction of knowing that they appealed to a good many members in this Council, and if they did not appeal to my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Khaparde, I can only regret it; I bow to his superior knowledge on the subject. But just let me point out one thing, and let us not make fools of ourselves here: 101 years ago Regulation III of 1818 was passed, which gives the Government executive power to restrict the liberty of the subject. For more than a century that has been part of the law of the land, and Mr. Khaparde is now trying to convince the Council that it is obvious that such a law could never have been passed, that it has never been the law of the land. He assures us solemnly that we the Government have been going on in this wicked way, for a century or more, that we have not the shadow of a right to do so, that this law has all along been ultra vires. I think I may appeal to my Hon'ble friend, Mr. S. N. Banerjee who told us, that 'Truth' was the direct offspring of 'Time.' Here 100 years have passed. Are not this Council willing to assume that it was a true law and that it is now at all events a fact? The Courts have been open to my Hon'ble friend and his predecessors in the profession for 100 years; they have never been able yet to get a court to agree with them and say that this law was ultra vires; and now he comes solemnly to the Council and says, 'For Heaven's sake let us not go on with it.' I have nothing more to say except that it seems to me that this argument would expose us to ridicule, and that we should only be making fools of ourselves if we went up to Parliament and asked them to give their sanction to this law. They would say quite logically, 'You have had a law like this for 100 years. What is the reason for your coming up now for sanction?'

"The only other point I want to speak about is the reference to the Defence of the Realm rules. There, again, I did not expect a very learned lawyer to fall into such an apparent error. It is perfectly true that the Defence of the Realm Act says that where anybody is charged with an offence being a British subject he must be tried,—that he has a right to be tried—not by court martial but by a civil court. I imagine that the Indian provisions which the

[12TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir George Lowndes; Mr. M. A. Jinnah.]

Hon'ble Member was referring to were those containing the powers which we have in India of restricting a person's movements, of internment as Mr. Khaparde calls it. But look at the Regulations under No. 14 of the Defence of the Realm Regulations.

"Where a person is suspected of acting or being about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or the Defence of the Realm (which is the same provision as we have in India), he may be ordered to reside in a particular place and, in fact, to do everything which Mr. Khaparde compendiously calls internment. The rules go on to say that if he breaks the order of internment he commits an offence and then he will be tried by a special court. That is the same under our Defence of India Act. We make it an offence to break any of those regulations and then we try him. So it is really no good saying that the Defence of India Act is quite different from the Defence of the Realm Act when it does exactly the same thing. My recollection is—I have really not had an opportunity of looking at it—that the case to which the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah referred earlier this afternoon, speaking of Lord Shaw's judgment, was one where the House of Lords affirmed the power of internment. My Hon'ble friend, I think

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"No. That was with regard to the distinction on the ground of British subject and a subject who is a naturalised British subject of foreign origin. That is the distinction you find in the Act."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"Again, I am only speaking from recollection. I read the case some time ago, but I think I can vouch for my recollection, that the person who was the subject of the decision there was a naturalised British subject."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"Quite so, naturalised British subject. But under the Defence of the Realm Act special provision is made for a naturalised British subject of foreign origin."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"He was a naturalised British subject, and claimed that the Defence of the Realm Act was ultra vires because they attempted to intern him without a trial. Lastly, I must point out that my Hon'ble friend Mr. Jinnah has quoted a minority judgment, that judgment of Lord Shaw was not accepted by the House of Lords. This was an argument that I should have liked to controvert at the time, but it did not appear to me to be of any materiality as the House of Lords upheld the internment.

"The only judgment which my Hon'ble friend was able to quote was a minority and a dissenting judgment. I can only say that that is not the way we usually proceed in such matters in a court of law

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"May I rise to a point of order. The Hon'ble the Law Member is misrepresenting me. I have quoted no judgment. I have simply given a case which he wanted."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I thought the Hon'ble Member did. My ears may have deceived me, but I cannot have dreamt this. However, I do not wish to prolong the discussion. There only remains the point raised by Mr. Khaparde, and I say again that the Moment case has nothing whatever to do with the point so far as the argument is based on section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act. In an earlier debate I dwelt at length on his contention and there is no need to go over it again. There have been a hundred years for the contention to be raised, but nothing has come of it."

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Mr. V. J. Patel; The President.] [12TH MARCH, 1919.]

6-59 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—" My Lord, I do not like to come into conflict with an eminent jurist, but as regards the Moment case the point was that you cannot deprive a man of his liberty to sue the Secretary of State, and therefore I submit that the analogy holds.

" The next point was that this Act is 100 years old and has never been taken to the House of Lords. As regards that I do not know if the people who came in from foreign States ever took advantage of their rights as British subjects. But so far as I am concerned I never heard of the Act till the Nathu Brothers were shut up. The question was asked how was it that in all these hundred years the case was not taken to the House of Lords? That may have happened because the people affected by it had not the means to carry up the matter to the Highest Tribunal of the Empire. Mr. Moment could only do so by collecting subscriptions.

" Then as regards the Irish Coercion Acts, the Crimes Act, etc., I looked through them and can find no analogy for the present Bill. In each case tribunals were constituted and orders for internment were passed by an order of the Resident Magistrate. I do not know what is meant by a Resident Magistrate in Ireland, but at any rate in each case the person had to go before him. This provision is a very exceptional one and has been introduced for the first time. The Defence of India Act was a war measure, and of course in time of war we expect to be subjected to many things which would not ordinarily occur, but I submit that there is no analogy between this and the English Acts, and that the provision is ultra vires.

The motion was put and the Council divided by a show of hands.

The amendment was therefore negatived.

7-4 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—" My Lord, I beg to withdraw my amendment, which runs as follows:—

' That for the words 'taken into consideration' at the end of the motion for taking the Report of the Select Committee into consideration, the following be substituted:—

' deferred till the question regarding the competence of this Council is authoritatively settled by His Majesty's Government to whom necessary reference should be made in that behalf ' ".

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the President:—" In adjourning the Council may I congratulate it on the admirable temper in which this very controversial subject has been debated this afternoon."

The Council then adjourned till Thursday, the 13th instant, at 11 A.M.

Dr. J. Neal (Deputy Medical Secretary,
B.M.A.).

} Representing the British Medical Association.

SIR CLIFFORD ALLBUTT: I have the honour, Sir, to introduce to you the members of the Deputation. In addition to myself, the Deputation consists of Lieutenant-Colonel R. Elliott, of the Indian Medical Service and the Naval and Military Committee; Sir Berkeley Moynihan, K.C.B., C.M.G.; Surgeon-General T. H. Benson, Indian Medical Service; Dr. Dawson Williams, Editor of the British Medical Journal; and Dr. J. Neal, Deputy Medical Secretary of the British Medical Association, gentlemen some of whom you no doubt know very well indeed. I appear as President of the British Medical Association.

I am afraid your criticism may be that I have come to speak to you upon a subject of which in my position I know nothing much, and for that reason I will not occupy more than I can help of your precious time. I suppose that at any rate one moving occasion for this meeting is that there is a feeling on both sides, both in our own profession and also, I believe, in the Government, that the Indian Medical Service is not so attractive at this moment as it might be; and I think that is true. At first I was asked whether, in my own University of Cambridge, there was any advice given to students one way or the other. When I came to think of it, it struck me that I hear, I will not say of none of our young men, but very few of our men going into the Indian Medical Service. That, together with reports which I have heard from my colleagues and others, and also from a letter which we have had from Edinburgh University, leads me to suppose that the service is not at present so attractive as I remember it used to be in my younger days when I was at college. That I shall leave others, who know more about it perhaps than I do, to speak about.

I then go on to the only point upon which I can profess to speak to you in any sense as an expert. When I look at the Indian Medical Service as a whole (I think this is not a digression, because I am referring to a point with which I am fairly familiar) I do not think it has its roots in medical science in the way that it ought to have, and I think that is one very good reason perhaps why it is standing still now. I know and you know that there is a great deal of very brilliant individual work being done by men—perhaps many men—whose names I might cite, the names of men that rise to the memory of all of us, but—and here I speak under correction—there is not a thoroughly organised and well-endowed system of research in medicine and the ancillary sciences. There is scarcely anything like a systematic, well-endowed and well-organised system; and without that I am sure from my own University experience and my experience of the National Medical Research Committee, of which for some years I was a member, and from other experience, that unless there is a strong foundation of that kind of permanent research on a considerable scale the Service will not thrive. Many words were spoken in the same direction, as you may remember, about the Army Medical Service some 20 years ago. At that time the matter was first of all taken up at Netley; afterwards the work was, as you may remember, moved from Netley to Millbank; and from that time there has been in existence a systematic, organised centre of medical research, partly covering no doubt tropical diseases, while at the same time there has also been an evolution of hospitals for that special purpose. That, I venture to think, has had a very remarkable effect upon the whole of the military medical service—I am speaking now, of course, of the home service.

As regards the Indian Medical Service, I am under the impression—and again I speak subject to correction—that it is not sufficiently well paid or at any rate sufficiently attractive in many ways,—pay is only one thing. At all events, a sufficiently attractive foundation is not laid upon which a tree can very rapidly begin to grow of the research system as a result of which all these appointments can be filled. I believe it is even not very easy for a member of the Indian Medical Service who has a disposition to carry out research to obtain leave and a berth in which to carry on his researches. I know from research in my own University that every student under our medical faculty has to undertake two pieces of research during his time; and I know that it is exceedingly difficult for a man in practice to settle down to anything like systematic research. If a man is merely on an uncertain tenure and has got to put in a little research work off and on when it is convenient to him, and get leave and so on, that I think is really of very little permanent use; it dries up; those saplings do not grow. There should be a permanent system of medical research, which should be as it were, the fountain from which all the rest should come. Those are the main points I should like to impress upon you from my own personal experience.

Then I might go on to the question of teaching. Any student who goes out from England to India has no doubt a very great deal to learn; that must be the case; I need not labour that question. There must be a great deal of teaching and learning of a formal and informal kind, but I am perfectly certain that the teaching and the learning would be of no use whatever unless they are supported by a system—again I come back to that point—of organised, disinterested research. But that I do not mean taking up remedies for this disease or that disease; I am not speaking of any utilitarian research, but of independent, disinterested research made attractive to men and in which there is a sufficient number of permanent berths, so that a man is not just turned in there for one month or three months to do a bit of work which may or may not happen to be of some service, but men will devote, shall I say, their lives to it. They will devote themselves entirely to research and they should be tempted by various positions in the Service to take up that kind of work. Some men are better fitted for that than they are for practice.

The only other point I desire to mention is really part of the same question, and that is what is called “study leave.” “Study leave” is not a phrase that I would very willingly accept; I would rather say “study periods.” “Study leave” means probably asking for leave. I would say that it should be compulsory for a man to undertake a study period; that he should not have to ask for leave, nor should it be put as a matter of leave, even if the suggestion is made to the student, but there should be compulsory study periods from time to time in the course of the Service.

I think I have said all I desire to say upon those points, Sir; there are no others in regard to which I am in any sense an expert, and therefore, I have no right to take up your time further. I will now call, if you will allow me, upon Lieutenant-Colonel Elliott to make some further remarks.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ELLIOTT : Sir, will you permit me to read what I have to say, because one feels that the matter is so important that one wishes to choose one's words very carefully.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE : Certainly.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ELLIOTT : It was in September 1913 that the Secretary of State for India invited the British Medical Association to assist him to ascertain the causes of the very serious falling off in the number and quality of the candidates for commissions in the Indian Medical Service. After careful enquiry the Association drew up a Memorandum on "The Present Position and future Prospects of the Service," which was forwarded to the Secretary of State in October 1913 and placed before the Royal Commission which sat in London in July 1914. This Memorandum discussed the principal causes of the dissatisfaction with the conditions of service which undoubtedly existed among the officers, and indicated the remedies which the Association considered were required. The chief points dealt with were : (1) the inadequate scale of remuneration ; (2) the difficulties in obtaining leave and study leave ; (3) the constant, irritating and damaging interference with private practice ; and (4) the unsatisfactory position of the Director-General and Surgeons-General in relation to the Government of India and the Local Government. Evidence on these matters was given before the Royal Commission by Lieutenant-Colonel R. H. Elliott on behalf of the Association. The Association has no concern with the finding of the Report on the condition of other services, but it feels that the Commission completely failed to appreciate the gravity of the position so far as the Indian Medical Service was concerned. Its recommendation and the whole attitude it took up were a cause of bitter disappointment to the officers of the Service and to all who had their interest at heart. When the Report of the Royal Commission was published in January 1917, the Association drew up a Memorandum on that part of the Report which dealt with the Indian Medical Service, recording its profound concern and disappointment with the whole trend of the Report and its recommendations, and pointing out (1) that the various points which the Association had drawn attention to had received scanty attention ; (2) that there was little or no evidence of any intention to redress the numerous grievances ; and (3) that those grievances, if allowed to continue, could not fail to result in a marked deterioration in a Service which had already become so unpopular as to cease to attract the class of candidate which it formerly commanded. This Memorandum having been approved by the Council and Representative Body, it was decided to ask the Secretary of State to receive a deputation from the Association, and, when it was found that the proposed deputation could not take place until after the Secretary of State's visit to India, the position was regarded as so serious that a further Memorandum was prepared and published in the British Medical Journal Supplement of 12th January 1918, copies being sent to the India Office and to the Secretary of State in India.

The Association is deeply interested in the welfare and in the future prospects of the Indian Medical Service. It feels that it has a right to be proud of its past records, which entitled it at one time to be considered one of the finest, if not the finest, medical organisation in the world. Its members have distinguished themselves alike on the field of battle and in the cause of science, using the latter world in its very widest acceptation. There was a time when it could and did command the best the British Medical Schools could give, whereas to-day its officers are in despair. The war, which has provided so many openings for other branches of the Army, has brought nothing but ruin to them. We have received a large number of letters containing cold details of the financial position of the writers, showing that they have been living on their savings or on their other sources of private income during the last three-and-a-half years, and are now heavily in debt. They complain that their services have not been used to the best advantage, and that they have been constantly superseded by officers junior to them in other branches of the medical organisation, and that they are not being paid a living wage. We are confident, Sir, that this matter will receive your very early and sympathetic attention. The Association looks upon it as a most pressing matter, and regards with the very gravest concern the straits to which these officers have been reduced through no fault of their own. That the position is indeed a serious one is obvious from a confidential circular issued by the Adjutant-General in India to General Officers Commanding of Divisions, dated 5th April 1918 : " The attention of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has been drawn to the fact that informal meetings of officers of the Indian Medical Service have recently been held at various stations in India, at which the future of that Service was freely and informally discussed by those present. The Commander-in-Chief considers such assemblies, even though they be of an informal nature, for the purpose of discussing questions connected with the organisation of their Service or with the rules for promotion or employment pertaining thereto, are contrary to the customs of the Army and opposed to military discipline." That such meetings have been held all over India we are aware, but we feel strongly that no good will come of stifling the feelings which have given birth to this movement. No Service is more loyal than the one whose cause we are pleading, and we feel that nothing but a very grave state of affairs could have brought the officers to their present state of apprehension, of unrest, and we might almost say, of despair.

There is another point which has been represented to us. The late Director-General, speaking in an Indian Medical Service Officers' mess, made the statement that, whereas the officers of the Service were so discontented that they proposed to resign their commissions in large numbers as soon as the war was over, he desired to let them know beforehand that such a course would not be permitted. This statement has been widely circulated and has caused a great feeling of unrest and apprehension. The Association would like to have your assurance that no such interference with the retirement of officers at the end of the war is either intended or likely.

So far I have spoken of the interests of the officers who are now in the Service, but the Association feels that it is on even stronger ground when it addresses you on behalf of those who are likely to be candidates in the future for commissions in the Indian Medical Service. It desires to remind you that for four years the number of medical students trained has been very small, whilst during the same period the wastage of the lives of medical men has been large. Moreover, the end of the war will see great openings in the Colonies and elsewhere for our young medical men. India needs the best that Great Britain can give, but it must be obvious that the quality it obtains will be regulated by the law of supply and demand. The British Medical Associations and the Medical Schools cannot be expected to give of their best to a Service with inferior attractions, and the Association is therefore anxious to know whether the Government of India is prepared to offer such terms as will attract the class of man that is needed. With this end in view we wish to ask you, does the Government propose to effect such reforms as will remove the present disabilities of those engaged in the Service ?

In conclusion, we desire to invite your attention to a point which we feel sure has been already brought before you. It is that the Indian Medical Service is the hinge Service of India. If it goes, every other European Service will suffer with it. It will not suffer alone. Of this we are confident, and we speak on very strong evidence. We feel that the occasion is a most momentous one and not only we and the officers of the Indian Medical Service, but the members of a much larger public as well await your reply with the greatest anxiety.

SIR BERKELEY MOYNIHAN : I am asked to speak to you as one who, in the days of his youth, entered the medical profession in order that he might enter the Indian Medical Service, and also as one who for a great number of years has been engaged in the teaching of men, many of whom have entered the Indian Medical Service and are now serving in it. I can confirm what has been said by former speakers, that ever since I have known of the question there has been a progressive deterioration in the qualities of the Service and in all those attributes of the Service which should make it attractive to men, but which have insidiously become repellent to them. When men who are about to decide on their future career have asked me as to the opportunities offered to them in the Indian Medical Service, I have had to say of recent years that I could not advise them to enter it. A few, in spite of that, have entered, and I have received from them letters from time to time showing me that they have regretted the decision they took. When I compare the reputation of the Service at the time when I was a student, and when it was my ambition to enter it, with the reputation which the Service now enjoys, I can only say that the change has been one of great disaster. I desire to submit to you some of the considerations which would make, in our view, the Service an acceptable one so that you could once again attract the best men who are now passing out of our Schools. One of the first things that suggests itself is that instead of there being two corps serving in India, it would be a great advantage if there was only one. There should be a Royal Indian Medical Corps instead of the Royal Army Medical Corps and the Indian Medical Service. When a man is accepted for service in this new Corps he should at once be seconded for study as a resident in a hospital at home; that is to say, nobody should be allowed to work in India until he has had an opportunity of acting as a resident, probably both on the medical and on the surgical sides, and perhaps also undertaking researches in the laboratories of his own hospital or another hospital to which he would be allotted. The third condition which we consider desirable is that there should be increased pay. That, I understand, has received sympathetic consideration already, but, so far as we can judge, the amount which is suggested is inadequate. In the fourth place, I desire to mention an aspect of the question which has made a particular appeal to me, and that is that the men should have a compulsory study period—I use Sir Clifford Allbutt's phrase rather than "compulsory study leave." It has been a growing conviction in the minds of many of us who have been practising medicine and surgery in the country recently that there has been amongst us all too little intellectual traffic, that the men in one hospital have hardly known what is happening in another. During the last few years some of us have been able to alter very considerably things in that regard by the formation of societies and of clubs for travel and by inaugurating and continuing courses for special study. The Universities and the teaching schools have attracted men from other hospitals, with the result now—or it was so before the war—that it is a commonplace to see surgeons coming from other places to spend periods of study of one, two, three, four, five, or six months, in the particular subject in which they are interested. We all feel that if something of that sort could be inaugurated, could be encouraged and could be made compulsory, it would be all to the advantage of the service. The future of medicine and of surgery do not rest entirely upon clinical work. This is a very critical moment in the history of our profession in the opinion of all who are engaged in teaching. We feel that clinical medicine and clinical surgery have got as far as they are likely to with older methods, and that if an advance is to be made in the future it can only be made by linking up research work and clinical work in a greater degree than before. The men who first entered the Indian Medical Service made a considerable reputation in the past for the original scientific work that has been done. But what has been done by one man ought to be done by many, and we look to you here to say that it is your intention to encourage research, and to offer not only opportunities, but something in the way of reward for successful researches carried out. That reward may take many shapes; I need not specify what they are, but we feel that the whole future of the medical profession is bound up with questions of that kind, and that the greater the encouragement you can give for the carrying out of research and the greater the rewards you can offer, the greater will be the advantage to our profession as a whole.

Then, Sir, there is the question of the continuation of the men who are serving in the Indian Medical Service in their privilege, of which I believe they have been in a more or less measure deprived, of conducting private practice. It is the feeling of all the men with whom I have spoken that that privilege or that right, whichever it is, should be allowed to continue in the future, always provided, of course, that the duties appertaining to the office which the man holds in the Service should not be interfered with in any way.

Finally, Sir, there are certain administrative changes which are necessary. To those, others are more competent to speak than myself. May I say finally, Sir, that in my judgment you are in an extremely critical position? The situation at the moment is crucial and requires the most tender and sympathetic consideration and treatment. If it receives that at your hands I have every confidence in believing that the future of the Indian Medical Service will be as great as the very distinguished past it has had.

DR. J. NEAL: As an official of the Association, Sir, which numbers nearly 23,000 members, I wish to emphasise the fact that in taking up this question of the Indian Medical Service we are not actuated by any selfish motives. As a matter of fact, the total number of officers in the Indian Medical Service is barely 2 per cent. of the total number of registered medical practitioners in the United Kingdom, so that really the profession would not be materially affected if the Indian Medical Service did not exist. But we assume that the Government desires to have an efficient Service, and, knowing as we do the discontent which exists amongst the officers of the Service and the causes which have given rise to it, we feel bound to place our knowledge at the disposal of the Government. Many of the defects to which our attention has been drawn and the suggested remedies have not been mentioned this afternoon, but they are clearly set out in the various Memoranda which we have prepared and which have all been forwarded to you.

The present position is admittedly unsatisfactory. Young men are deterred from entering the Service, and the teaching authorities of our Medical Schools feel that they cannot advise their students to take up the Indian Medical Service as their career. As evidence of that I would just like to read a few lines from a letter we have received from Professor Harvey Littlejohn, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Edinburgh, who, after writing to say how sorry he is he cannot be present this afternoon, says: "I would very gladly have come, as the question is one which is of great interest and importance. I have for several years advised graduates not to go in for the Indian Medical Service under the present conditions, and I did so with great regret, because in former years the Service was able to command the very best of the graduates of Edinburgh."

Sir, as the great representative organisation of the profession, the Association is also looked to for advice on this matter, and it will be glad to know the intention of the Government and the extent to which it is proposed to give effect to the various reforms which we have indicated as being in our opinion essential if the service is to preserve in the future that high standard which it has attained in the past.

DR. DAWSON WILLIAMS: Sir, it is thought that I ought to say a few words although I feel that I cannot add anything to what has been already laid before you. But I have been Editor of the British Medical Journal for some 20 years, and consequently the complaints and the grievances, and the hopes and fears, of that Service are continually being brought before me. If I look back to my own early days, the Indian Medical Service, as Sir Berkeley Moyinhan has said, commanded really the cream of the Medical Schools among a certain class of men—a very superior class of men—men who, among other defects, suffered from want of money and who desired to find a means of livelihood. We were told—and I was led to believe from the experience of contemporaries—that that was the case. But we are now quite clear that that is no longer the case. Another inducement was the opportunity for the study and practice of medicine. That was a very great inducement to the class of man that you desire to have, and of course he always had at the back of his mind the hope that eventually, when he got to be middle-aged, he would have the opportunity of achieving such financial success as might put him beyond the need of coming home to live under circumstances of penury. That has been, as I understand and believe, largely destroyed. It never applied, of course, to a very large number of men; it only obtained in a few centres; but there was a sporting chance and that had a very considerable amount of weight.

I will not detain you any further, Sir, except to say this: that it has been a grievous trouble to me to see how steadily year by year the whole tone of this great Service has deteriorated. It is not that the men have deteriorated, but that their outlook has deteriorated. They become depressed and discouraged. We look to you in the hope that a better state of affairs may be brought about. We know very well the difficulties of your position; we know the immense task that is in front of you. We know that in the pronouncement which you made last August you indicated the direction in which your policy had to go, but we also observed that you said, as emphatically as you said anything else, that that policy must develop through successive stages. We are of the opinion that during that development, whatever direction it may take, the Indian Medical Service should be maintained, and we appeal to you to restore that service to the contentment which it formerly enjoyed.

SURGEON-GENERAL BENSON : I will not detain you a minute, Sir. Having held the appointment of Surgeon-General in Madras, I should like to emphasise one point that Colonel Elliott brought out, and that is the position of the Surgeon-General as regards the Local Government. As the head of the scientific branch the Surgeon-General has no access whatever to the Members of Council or the Governor; all his proposals are dealt with as a rule by a junior civilian, and afterwards handed over to the Member of Council who holds the medical portfolio. He not being fully possessed of the technical and scientific knowledge which is required to deal with these matters, the proposals are generally shelved or are very often shelved, without proper justification. Another point I can speak of in connection with that is the difficulty experienced by officers in getting leave, not only leave for furlough but leave for study, and that is entirely due as far as I know, to the deficiency in the cadre of the Indian Medical Service.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE : Sir Clifford Allbutt and Gentlemen, I think my first duty is to apologise to you for the great length of time which has elapsed before I saw my way to receive this deputation; and my second duty is to thank you for coming here to-day and for giving the carefully thought out and very weighty words of warning which you have all addressed to me, particularly those of Colonel Elliott. I do not think it will be necessary for me to say that advice coming from you, the representatives of the medical profession, particularly at this moment, when your profession stands, if possible higher than it ever did, because of the services that you have rendered both at home and in the field, will receive the most attentive and sympathetic consideration not only from me, but from the Government of India, who are charged with the responsibility of maintaining the Indian Medical Service.

Now, Gentlemen, I am going to follow the example of Colonel Elliott; I am going, if you will permit me, to read in the main what I have to say to you. I cannot give you to-day either in outline or in detail a settled policy. Our policy with regard to the problems which you have brought to our notice must be carefully elaborated, in a time of a great pre-occupation, not by me but by the whole Government machine—by the Government of India as a whole, by the India Council, over which I have the honour to preside, consulting together and carefully weighing all the advice and assistance which we can obtain. Therefore, I think the best thing I can do is to tell you quite frankly my own personal views, in order that you may know, at a time when the policy is not complete, what I at any rate intend to try and achieve. I do not mean to say that there is any difference of opinion among us, because I know there is not. I have recently come from India, where I have had opportunities of consultation with the Viceroy and Members of his Government, and I can say that there is not. I have no right to speak for anybody else at this stage, and I want you to understand that I am speaking for myself only.

Gentlemen, during my visit to India I gave considerable attention, as far as I could in the time at my disposal, to informing myself as to the condition of affairs in the Indian Medical Service. I was partly influenced by the fact that I was to have the honour of meeting this deputation when I returned home, and that it was my duty to be prepared to say something to them that was worth their trouble to hear. Secondly, I knew already—and knew still more when I had been a short time in India—the unsatisfactory condition of affairs in the Service. Nobody could have listened to the leaders of a great profession, as I have listened to them this afternoon, and heard of their inability to advise students to enter the Indian Medical Service under present conditions, without realising that that was a situation which must give rise to the greatest apprehensions among those who were responsible for the future of the service, and must reflect a very unsatisfactory state of affairs in the Service itself. Gentlemen, I was anxious to do my share in removing those grievances and apprehensions from a service, which, as Colonel Elliott has said, has so proud a history of imperial achievement—an imperial achievement which I think has never been shown more remarkably than in the contribution to our cause during the four years of war. Perhaps the fact that many years ago I approached some way towards the portals of your profession as a medical student has given me a special and peculiar interest in problems of this kind. But I think more important than any other consideration is the underlying fact that I hold for the time being a position which imposes upon me the duty of considering in all its aspects the welfare of the Indian Empire. The problem which we are confronted with to-day is not a question of doing something for the medical professions; it is not a question of doing something for the Indian Medical Service; it is a question of doing something for India by ensuring a supply of good doctors. It is hardly worth saying—it is a platitude—that this is a vital necessity. Just as India cannot to-day, or, so far as anybody can see—I was going to say for ever—do without the services of those who help to govern her, so India cannot command the services of those who help to govern her unless the Europeans who carry the burden of the Empire in India can be supplied with the best expert medical aid. And therefore, as you, Sir rightly said, the Indian Medical Service can be regarded as the pivot upon which all other Imperial Services in India depend. But, over and above that, the Indian Medical Service is a service on which India is mainly dependent for the satisfaction of all its manifold medical and sanitary requirements and also—and not least—for the education of future generations of medical men in India. I therefore think it is an essential part of our duty to see that the Indian Medical Service should not be allowed to deteriorate, and I can assure you that I am determined to do everything I can to provide for India a Medical Service of the highest quality obtainable, a service that will be able to do its work, a service that is content with the conditions under which it works, and therefore a service whose work will be in keeping with the great traditions of the past. Therefore, I am particularly anxious to express to you my gratitude for your assistance, and my threat that I shall ask the British Medical Association, in the months that are to come, for further assistance at every stage, and I shall begin by communicating to the Government of India the text of your observations to-day.

Now, before dealing with some of the detailed points that you made, I should like to state to you, if I may, my views on some of the general aspects of the case. We start by wanting, for the reasons that I have mentioned, an efficient Medical Service for India, and we desire it at a time when there is a world-wide demand for British doctors, at a time when the horrible national necessities of the war are taking boys who would otherwise be medical students and putting them into the Army, and at a time when the way in which the members of your profession have put their services at the disposal of the armies in the field, and the casualties which they have suffered must make the supply of doctors short and the competition for their services, both at home and abroad, great. Therefore, it seems to me that for the reasons I have stated we must have doctors in India for the sake of India. It would be folly of the worst possible kind not to prepare to offer, when peace comes, such conditions of service to the doctors whom we require as to ensure successful competition with the other people who want them as we do.

I need not remind you that the Indian Medical Service is not a purely military service. It has its military side and it has its civil side. In war the military side of the service necessarily altogether overshadows the civil. I believe I am right in saying that no less than 339 officers have been reverted from civil to military duty. This in itself has, I think, aggravated the discontent which all have to admit by abnormal conditions, by the friction which compulsory reversion to military duty necessarily involves, by the misunderstandings about pay, by the opportunity for closest comparison with the Royal Army Medical Corps, and, finally, by the suspensions of retirements owing to the necessity of keeping the Service up to its maximum strength by the retention of all efficient officers. In so far as discontent arises from these abnormal conditions, I can assure you that both the Government of India and I will do our best to grapple with the difficulties. We have improved the rates of staff pay in the field; we have developed a scheme of accelerated and acting promotion to prevent supersession of Indian Medical Service officers by officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps, and, finally we have made promotions in the place of officers who have had to be retained beyond the normal limit. Details of these steps have already been published in the Press. In addition, two temporary Surgeons-General have recently been appointed to meet the special needs of the war, and at this moment we are considering here a proposal of the Government of India to create certain additional military administrative appointments in the Indian Medical Service carrying the rank of Colonel.

However, apart from these abnormal conditions, we are really concerned this afternoon in the preparation of conditions for normal times, and, therefore, I want to lay down four governing principles which, it appears to me, must be achieved for those normal times.

First of all, I would suggest to you that a medical man in the Indian Medical Service must be ensured suitable opportunities of what perhaps I may call interesting practice. It must be worth his while professionally and scientifically. It must offer him opportunities of contributing by a wide experience to the knowledge of his profession, and therefore to the possible cure or prevention of the ills from which humanity suffers. I am told that there is no country in the world professionally more attractive than India, and I think, therefore, that the opportunities which the country affords must be at the disposal of those whom we ask to come out from this country to serve her. The application of this principle would make it, I think, impossible, or, at any rate, difficult to separate the military side of the Indian Medical Service from the civil side. I do not wish to prejudge the question, but it would appear to me that neither the military side nor the civil side alone would fulfil the principle which I have just stated.

Then I come, as Sir Berkeley suggested, to the question of private practice. My views on this matter can be very shortly stated. It would be contrary, in my opinion, to this first principle to deprive members of the Indian Medical Service of their opportunities of private practice. The question has recently been most carefully examined, both in this Office and in India. It has two chief aspects—firstly, what is the legal position? Has an officer in the Indian Medical Service any right vested in statute to private practice? Secondly, whatever the legal position, what is the attitude to this question likely to prove most advantageous to the officials and peoples of India whose servant he is? As to the legal position, I am advised by the authorities of this Office—and with this opinion the Government of India, who have gone into the matter independently, agree—that there is nothing in the state of the law at the present time which gives an officer of the Indian Medical Service a statutory right of private practice whether within certain prescribed limits or as a general permission. Government is quite free to make what rules it likes for the Indian Medical Service on this question. I am glad that it is so. It seems to me that it would be an intolerable position for the Government of India as an administrator of a great Service to have its freedom of administration circumscribed in so important a matter. But the practical matter of policy is much more important than the legal position. What is best for the peoples of India and for the Service itself? Let me state the position as I understand it. In the first place, the Government has thought it necessary to debar the holders of certain posts from the privilege of private practice. They think it necessary to retain that power, and to exercise it by revising the list from time to time. Secondly, the Government consider that they must retain power to determine the conditions under which the privilege of private practice may be exercised, and to see that the exercise of it does not interfere with the efficient discharge of the officer's duties, and that in regard to professional charges the privilege is not abused. Having considered the matter very carefully, I personally am satisfied that the present arrangement which gives freedom to practise privately within well recognised and quite wide limits, is open to no serious objection, either from the point of view of the interests of the Indian Medical Service or from that of the peoples of India. Their interests in the matter must be recognised. It is arguable—and I for one would certainly argue—that it is to their interests that every possible encouragement should be given to the development of an indigenous private medical profession; it might then be contended that one way of doing so would be to circumscribe the opportunities of Government doctors for private practice or even to take away those opportunities altogether. But, as I have already stated, I could not subscribe to such a view as that. It seems to me better in every way that this indigenous medical profession should grow up in an atmosphere of free competition with highly trained European doctors. Competition of this kind sets a high standard and consequently encourages and maintains a strong connection with Western medical schools and methods. I see, therefore, no reason for curtailing the present privileges of the Indian Medical Service in the matter of private practice and many reasons against doing so, chief among which I would say that it would derogate from the principle which I am trying to establish, that the scientific and professional opportunities of the country must be at the disposal of the officers of the Service. Of course, private practice must not be allowed to encroach upon public duty. Everybody agrees that the State comes first, but it is in the interests of the State that in the time at his disposal the doctor should benefit by the opportunities of private practice, and it seems to me at this stage, although I cannot express any final opinion, that any abuse of this privilege can be cured by the ordinary methods of Service discipline, and I would leave it at that. So much for the first principle.

My second principle is that the remuneration offered to the Service should be adequate. Speaking for myself again, I consider that the pay and emoluments of the Service are inadequate at present and are admittedly in need of revision. So far as concerns the military side of the Service, the introduction of the station hospital system for Indian troops will afford an opportunity of reconsidering the present scales of pay and instituting a comparison between the emoluments of Indian Medical Service officers and those of Royal Army Medical Corps officers under their station hospital system. I regret I am not able yet to announce any decision as regards civil pay, but I recognise the urgency of this side of the question even at a time when so many of the doctors ordinarily on the civil side are temporarily on the military side, and I intend to use the full weight of my authority in pressing the matter to a decision, which, in spite of the difficulties which we all recognise I consider has been too long delayed already.

The question of leave is closely connected with that of pay and emoluments. Of course there were difficulties in obtaining leave before the outbreak of war. The Public Services Commission considered that the reserves for leave, deputation and training, needed re-calculation, and, though it is impossible, during the continuance of the war, to arrive at any satisfactory solution of this question, the Government of India and I are both fully alive to its importance. Improved rates of sterling leave pay for the officers in military employ are under consideration, and I hope will be announced shortly. The cadre of the Service must provide for an adequate leave reserve, because it is obvious that sufficient periodic holidays at home are necessary for Europeans serving in India.

Now I come to my third principle, and that is that the Indian Medical Service must afford in its organisation increased and increasing opportunities for Indians to enter the Service. I am sure you will admit that this is essential if the Service is to continue to be firmly established in the respect of the people of India. It is in harmony with the policy of His Majesty's Government as regards all Services as expressed by them through me on the 20th August last. The application of this principle means that Indians must be trained either in this country, or—I hope increasingly—by improvement and extension of the opportunities for medical education in India, to enter the Service on equal conditions and with equal opportunities of promotion. This involves, among other things, the development of aided schools and colleges in India. I need hardly say, but I ought to say, that the assertion of this principle is not intended to detract from the necessity of keeping an adequate proportion of officers from home, both to supply the needs of the European service and to maintain the traditions of the Service.

My fourth principle is that the conditions of the Service shall be as free as we can make them from irritation, friction or annoyance. Now it is not only the correspondence which I receive and which you all, I am sure, receive; it is not only my visit to India that has convinced me—but I think even the most superficial observer would acknowledge—that this condition is not fulfilled at the present time. There is great unhappiness in the Service. Colonel Elliott has brought to my notice something that has been said about threatened resignations. The best way of dealing with that, Gentlemen, is to remove the causes for unhappiness that make people want to resign, and I look forward to the day when Sir Berkeley Moynihan will use his unrivalled opportunities to persuade people to go into the Indian Medical Service, when people will go about their work so happily that nobody will talk of resignation, and when everyone will regret the time when advancing age makes return home necessary. Some of the unhappiness can undoubtedly be cured by attention to the specific points which you have raised, by attention to some of the matters with which I have already incidentally dealt in discussing my principles. But there is one over-riding consideration, which Sir Berkeley Moynihan referred to, one matter which, apart from doubts as to the future as regards professional opportunity or pay, seems to me to make for a dangerous state of affairs. It is in the relations between the Royal Army Medical Corps as employed in India and the Indian Medical Service. It does not seem to me to be possible that, with two Services the relations of which are so intimate and peculiar as the relations between these two Services, you can avoid the friction which is happening from day to day. It is alleged that faults of one are visited on the shoulders of the other, that credit due to one is given to the other, that promotion in one is delayed by the other, that the prestige of one is greater than the prestige of the other, that the claims of one, or, if I may use an expression which must not be taken too literally, the grievances of one receive better attention than the claims or the grievances of the other. Is not this—I put it forward very tentatively—inseparable from the maintenance of the two Services, side by side, as separate organisations in India? I do not now express a positive and definite opinion as to which of the two Services should be absorbed in the other, or what name you should give the new Service. That must depend largely upon other considerations which will be determined by the events of this war. I do not even now say that “absorption” is the right word to use. What I do say is that the two Services must be considered together with a view to promoting harmony and with a view, so far as possible, to achieving unification. I think that this means a drastic reorganisation of the Indian Medical Service, and a drastic reorganisation of the relations of the Indian Medical Service to the Government, which you, Sir, mentioned. I think we should be prepared for this and that we should be ready with some scheme of reorganisation for the time when recruiting starts again in full swing after the war, and I think that that reorganisation should proceed with the view and intention of ensuring the four principles that I have just enunciated.

I have already brought my views on this matter to the attention of the Government of India, and I assure you that I shall continue, despite their great preoccupations, to do so. I discussed the matter with prominent members of the Indian Medical Service and with the military authorities in India, and my conviction that prompt action was necessary was confirmed by all that I heard. I do not mean by “pressure” that pressure on the Government of India is necessary, for I am satisfied, and I know that their actions will show, that they realise the urgency of the case as much as I do. All that I mean is that from this side, as I know from their side, we will not lose sight of the matter or let the grass grow under our feet. I am sure I may hope that when we are preparing our scheme, when we are formulating our new organisation, the British Medical Association will give us the benefit of their advice, because I am very anxious that whatever scheme is adopted should have their approval.

Gentlemen, I am afraid I have taken up a great deal of your time, but if you have not completely lost patience I want to deal with one or two points which I have picked out, not because I have omitted the others from the considerations that you have brought before me. I need hardly say that I entirely agree that the Secretary of State, the Government of India, and the local Governments require and should take all suitable means to obtain the best and most accessible advice obtainable on the very various medical and sanitary problems with which a modern Government is called upon to deal. As you are aware, the duties of the medical personnel of this office were considered by my predecessor, and more particularly defined. The Secretary of State's Medical Adviser, who has recently been liberated from the routine duties of the Medical Board, has now powers and responsibilities which are as particularised in your representation. The Medical Adviser acts also as an Appeal Board when required. So much for this Office. The exact relations between the Government of India and the local Governments and their respective Medical Advisers I feel I must leave to be worked out locally; but I propose, as I said before, to communicate a copy of the proceedings of this Deputation to the Government of India at once, so that the whole question may be fully considered by the authorities in that country.

As regards education and recruitment, you recommend three things,— firstly, that candidates from India should be required to undergo a period of training in British medical schools especially in the diseases of women and children; secondly, that successful candidates for the Service should be encouraged to hold resident hospital appointments—I think you said “made to hold”—.

SIR BERKELEY MOYNIHAN:—Yes, Sir.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE:—And, thirdly, that facilities for study leave or study periods are of great importance. I am in full agreement with your Association as to the first, that all members of the Indian Medical Service should have had training in the diseases of women and children. As regards the suggestion that training must necessarily be in British medical schools, you will no doubt recall that the Public Services Commission made a specific recommendation that such training should be required, and remarked that the means for acquiring it are lacking in many parts of India. In so far as this deficiency exists in India, I agree that the training must be acquired in this country, but I look forward with confidence to the time when India itself will provide facilities for an all-round medical training. I also entirely agree that it is desirable that successful candidates should, to as full an extent as the exigencies of the Service may permit, have held resident hospital appointments. Full provision for their being seconded for this purpose already exists.

As regards study periods, I am fully alive to the advantages they offer, and in the year before the war no less than 80 officers went through these courses of study and only the war has put a stop to them. This leave carries allowances with it, and is not debited against ordinary leave. It qualifies now for accelerated promotion where evidence is produced that the course of study undertaken has been properly pursued. I will bring your suggestions, Sir Clifford, specially to the notice of the Government of India. The importance of affording officers opportunities, during the early part of their service in India, of attending the practice of hospitals in the Presidency and other large towns is one of those questions which must necessarily await the return of normal conditions.

Then when you talked of recruitment you observed that the grant of permanent commissions by selection should be kept within the narrowest possible limits, and that it should be made plain that the grant of temporary commissions in the Indian Medical Service should carry with it no guarantee of subsequent permanent appointment. As regards the second point, there is a clause in the Agreement which every temporary officer is required to sign, which perhaps I may quote to you:—“I accept this Agreement on the understanding that it confers no claim to permanent appointment to the Indian Medical Service.” At the same time it must be obvious that a man's record of temporary service rendered under the exacting conditions of war will be a most valuable criterion of the qualities of initiative, self-reliance, and pluck which are so necessary in the case of a Service like the one we are discussing.

I am heartily in agreement with your view that the appointments made by selection should be confined within the narrowest possible limits. I think I can claim that the actual number of appointments made—36—since the institution of the Selection Committee in the autumn of 1915 fully proves that the pledge publicly given at the time when the Committee was established, namely, that appointments would be made only to provide for the absolutely indispensable needs of the Service, has been fully adhered to. The composition of the Committee is, I think, a sufficient guarantee that no candidates have been appointed who did not fully come up to the standard of success demanded by competitive examination. In the great majority of cases candidates, in addition to academic distinction won, had proved their fitness by service well rendered in the field. My only anxiety is that as the war goes on the number of appointments which it will be necessary to make at its completion, or so soon after as it may be possible to fill up the depleted cadre of the Service, continually increases. At present the estimate of such appointments reaches the minimum number of 150.

There is only one other topic upon which I should like to say a word. I can assure Sir Clifford Allbutt of my sympathy with everything that he has said about research. Sir Pardey Lukis established the Research Association, and the Journal of Research bears witness to its work. It is only a few weeks ago since I myself visited the Parel Laboratories in Bombay, where Colonel Liston is conducting such good research work, especially on plague and serums generally, and I am sure you will admit, as you stated when you opened the proceedings this afternoon, that there are many examples of valuable research being done in India. You and I are in complete agreement in thinking that opportunities for research and reward for research form an important part in the considerations which are necessary to ensure a good medical service in India.

Gentlemen, that is all I have to say to you this afternoon, and I am sorry to have detained you so long. What I have said has been more in the nature of a frank expression of my own views than an attempt to formulate in detail a new policy. I have to repeat that both the Viceroy and I who have only recently been discussing this subject together, are fully alive to the importance of the problem which you are here to present to me, and I am awaiting the proposals of the Government of India. I feel optimistic; and I have no doubt that, with the assistance which I am sure you will give us, with the medical advice which he and I have at our disposal, we shall find a solution which will put an end to the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs, which will ensure for India the medical assistance which she needs, and which will ensure a future for your profession in that country as worthy and as important as its past history.

SIR CLIFFORD ALLBUTT: Will you allow me, Sir, to thank you not merely for your great courtesy in receiving us this evening, but for the very full and careful consideration you have given to our views?

(The Deputation then withdrew.)

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.
LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Thursday, the 13th March, 1919.

PRESENT :

His Excellency BARON CHELMSFORD, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., G.O.M.G., G.C.B.E., Viceroy and Governor General, presiding, and 61 Members, of whom 53 were Additional Members.

CRIMINAL LAW (EMERGENCY POWERS) BILL—contd.

His Excellency the President:—"Before we proceed with the discussion of the further amendments standing in the paper, I should like to explain to the Council the procedure I intend to adopt. The Bill will be considered clause by clause, and when the amendments, if any, in respect of a clause have been disposed of, the question will be put that that clause or that clause as amended, as the case may be, stand part of the Bill. I see there are no amendments on the paper relating to the preamble. The question therefore is that the Preamble of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill." 11

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I make a formal motion that clause 1 stand part of the Bill?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to propose the following amendment:—

That after sub-clause (2) of clause 1 the following sub-clause be inserted:—

'(2a) This Act shall not come into force till six months will have elapsed after the formation of new Legislative Councils in accordance with the Reform Scheme. Provided, however, that if anarchical and revolutionary crimes become prevalent in any part of British India before that, the Governor General may, with the consent of the Legislative Council, make a declaration to that effect in the Gazette of India and introduce any provisions of this Act or, if necessary, the whole Act in such part'

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent; Mr. V. J. Patel.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

"I do not wish to make a long speech in moving this amendment. It is clear from the wording of my amendment, whether the Council will accept it or not, what my object is. We wish to see the effect of the reforms before this Bill is put into operation. What I say is, that even if you pass this Bill, do not bring it into force in any part of British India before we have had some experience of the reforms. Should however in the meantime in any part of the country you see there is a recrudescence of these crimes, then you can introduce the provisions of this Act. Of course, I wish to have one proviso added, that is to say, that the Act should be brought into operation with the consent of this Council. It is rather unusual to consult the Legislative Council before taking action of this kind. My argument is this. This law is an extremely extraordinary one and you are empowering by this measure the executive with judicial powers. Therefore, in such a case I think, there will be no harm if you depart from the usual practice and consult the Council in this matter. With these words, my Lord, I place the amendment before the Council."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I am afraid that for the reasons given yesterday at some length in connection with Mr. Banerjee's amendment, the present amendment cannot be accepted. We do not know when the reforms will come into operation. We all hope that they will not be delayed, at any rate, for very long, but we cannot possibly consent to adjourn this Bill or postpone the date on which it shall come into operation for an indefinite period of that kind. It is true that the Hon'ble Member has inserted a proviso which in his judgment would meet an emergency, but I would point out to the Council that the wording of that proviso does not correspond at all with the wording of the Preamble to Part II. If Hon'ble Members have the Bill before them and refer to the Preamble to Part II they will see that this is so. I would also point out that that proviso omits all reference to Part IV of the Bill upon which the Government lay considerable importance. I suggest that this amendment is really tantamount to double legislation by this Council. If the measure was of such a nature that it could be deferred until the Reform Scheme came into operation, we should not have brought it forward at this moment.

"The procedure which the Hon'ble Member proposes would also involve frequent reference on details to this Council. I refrain however for the present from dealing with the constitutional position of this Council as it is raised more definitely in a later amendment. I regret that I must oppose the amendment brought forward by Mr. Chanda."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I have nothing more to add to what I have already said. "

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move that in clause 1 (3) for the words 'three years' the words 'one year' and for the words 'of the termination of the present war' the words 'this Act comes into force' be substituted.

"I do not think it is necessary to make a speech in support of this amendment. If an emergent measure is required, I think it would be enough if you keep it in force for one year from the time it comes into force instead of three years as stated in the Bill. With these words I place this amendment before the Council."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, there are two other Hon'ble Members who have moved similar amendments. May I suggest that they should speak if they wish to move them before I speak ? "

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I move, your Excellency, my amendment. I beg to move that in clause 1 (3)

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[The President ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul ; Sir William Vincent ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

His Excellency the President :—"It will be convenient, Mr. Patel, if you move your amendment now, but if you like to speak it will practically cover the same ground. Do you wish to speak?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I shall speak later."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—"My Lord, I have nothing more to add to what the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda has said."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"The effect of this amendment, my Lord, would be to leave the Government powerless to deal with this revolutionary crime for an indefinite period, and to give them powers for one year only. If we consented to wait for three years, we should be practically admitting that there was no urgent necessity for this legislation. I have already explained to the Council the reason why it is urgent. The Government have already reduced the period for which the Bill is to be in force to the minimum which they think possible, and there are indeed many who think that three years is an inadequate period. Government cannot accept an amendment to reduce the period further or to postpone indefinitely the date on which the Bill will come into force. I really myself am not quite sure as to the meaning of the first part of the Hon'ble Member's amendment, as he says 'for the words 'three years' the words 'one year' and 'for the words 'termination of the present war' the words 'this Act comes into force' be substituted.' To interpret that I had to refer again to the previous amendment which had just been put to the Council, and I concluded that the Hon'ble Member meant that the Bill was not to come into force until six months had lapsed after the formation of the new Legislative Council."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"My Lord, there are two points involved in this amendment. The first is that one year should be substituted for three years. With regard to this I would say that the difficulty the Hon'ble the Home Member has urged will be met if the amendment is accepted. If a real necessity is felt by Government after one year to renew this Act, they will not find it difficult to renew it. But three years seems to be a long period in the view of those who have urged this amendment in the Council. The substitution of one year for three years does not mean that at the end of one year the Government will be powerless and will not have sufficient weapons in their armoury to deal with revolutionary or anarchical crime. But if the existing weapons should prove insufficient, it will be open to the Government to bring up a short continuing measure before the Legislative Council and pass it, as has been done on other occasions at one sitting of the Council, because the Government will have a majority even when the Reformed Councils come into existence, so far as one can see."

"My Lord, there is the other part of the amendment, namely, that 'for the words 'of the termination of the present war' the words 'this Act comes into force' be substituted.' The Hon'ble the Law Member himself observed, in speaking on the previous amendment of Mr. Chanda, that the date of the termination of the present war is an indefinite and yet undefined period. Well, for that very reason the amendment now before the Council should commend itself even to him. We do not know the date from which the termination of the war will be determined. Instead of using that expression, if it is said 'from the date on which this Act comes into force', 'we shall know for what period the Act is passed.'"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"May I put a question to the Hon'ble Member? I do not quite understand the date to which the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda refers when he speaks of the Act coming into force unless it is specially laid down in the Act; it is a matter of interpretation and I read this amendment with the previous one."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"I understood the words to mean the date on which the Bill would be passed, or rather the date on which it would receive the assent of the Governor General. That is how I understood it. The expression 'from the date of the termination of the present war' is at present indefinite and it will prolong, in fact, the duration of the Act by at least several months, whereas if the period is to run from the date on which the Act becomes law, the period will be what the proposal of the Government evidently on the face of it would mean—three years from the date on which it becomes law."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, there is very little to say in answer to the Hon'ble Pandit except that the date of the termination of the war, though at this moment an indeterminate date will be fixed by a Bill which has already come before this Council in accordance with the declaration of the date of the termination of the war by His Majesty's Government. There will therefore be no indeterminate date from which the Bill will come into force. My Hon'ble friend Sir William Vincent has said that he wishes to have this Act in force when the Defence of India Act comes to an end, and there is no intention to use this Act till after the termination of the war. As to the period for which the Government have, after mature consideration, decided that the Act must be in force, we think that a period of three years from the termination of the war is the shortest period for which it is any use having legislation at all."

11-14 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, as it will appear from the remarks of my Hon'ble friend Pandit Malaviya which I accept, the one year would be one year from the date the Bill was passed."

The amendment was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move 'that in clause 1(3) for the words 'three years' the words 'one year' and for the words 'termination of the present war' the words 'passing of the Reform Bill in Parliament' be substituted.' The clause as it is proposed to be amended, will read thus:—It shall continue in force for one year from the passing of the Reform Bill in Parliament. Now, my Lord, it has been suggested that one year is rather a short period. I put it to the Council to consider whether there is really any sense in making it three years. I consider three years an arbitrary period, and so also is one year. We feel that the period of three years is long and that when the period of one year is over, you can always come to this Legislative Council and as my friend the Panditji observed, you can get through an amending Bill in one day and have the period extended if the necessities of the case require it. Another point that I wish to make is that the Act should be in force from the date of the passing of the Reform Bill in Parliament. At present, as your Excellency knows, there is no urgency about it. Let the Act be passed if you want to pass it, but let it come into force after the passing of the Reform Bill in Parliament."

"With these few words, I move my amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, the Hon'ble Member proposes that the Bill should not come into force until after the passing of the Reform Bill in Parliament, and, as I understand, he advocates this course on the ground that the measure is not an urgent one. I have spoken at length on this subject at two successive meetings of this Council endeavouring to make it clear that, in the opinion of Government, the measure was of the greatest urgency and yet the Hon'ble Member asks me to postpone the operation of the Act until after the new Councils will have come into being, when, according to the generally expressed opinion of this Council, the need for such legislation will really be less. That, I think, is not consistent with the arguments previously put forward. He further asks that the Bill should then remain in force for one year only. We fixed the period of three years as the minimum period within which we could hope for this movement to settle down. We are satisfied that a period of one year is not sufficient, and we do not think that it is desirable to renew a discussion of the character of the present one every year in this Council. The debates on the present Bill will indicate how difficult it would be really in practice to follow the course advocated by the Hon'ble Member of passing a measure in one day. For these reasons I must oppose the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I have nothing more to add."

The amendment was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul * :—" I have nothing more to add to what has already been said by the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda and the Hon'ble Panditji. I think, too, that three years is rather a long period and that one year is quite sufficient. If you have to extend it then, it will come before the Council and there will be no difficulty. That is all "

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I have nothing to add except to make one remark which I ought really to have made before and which, with your Excellency's permission, I shall make now. It was said we ought to employ this Act only after the conclusion of peace. I am quite prepared to give an assurance to this Council that we will issue no notification under it until peace is declared."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" I have nothing more to add, my Lord."

• The amendment was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 1 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 2, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Your Excellency, I beg to move that in clause 2 (1) the following definition be inserted :—

" 'Revolutionary movement' means a movement directed to the overthrow by force of His Majesty's established Government in India."

" I submit, my Lord, that the Council should lay down what in their opinion is meant by a revolutionary movement, and the question is one of extreme importance. I take it that the Government in the framing of this Bill had largely in mind the ideas floating before the Rowlatt Committee when they formulated their proposals. It may be that the expression revolutionary movement is so clear or ought to be so clear to any understanding that there is no need for any accurate definition thereof, but I hope to be able to convince the Government that the matter is not quite so simple, and that the Legislature ought to attempt a definition thereof if it is possible to do so. I have taken it that the Government want to suppress any movement that is intended to bring about a revolution in the country by the overthrow of the established Government by means of force not by means of constitutional agitation, and I thought that the Rowlatt Committee also had a similar intention. Speaking of the movement in Bengal they say at page 15 :—

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

‘ Barindra’s object in returning to Bengal was, as he subsequently stated, to organise a revolutionary movement with the object of overturning the British Government in India by violent means ’.

“ I take it, therefore, that the object that is aimed at is the overthrow or overturning of the British Government in India by violent means or by force. The risk of avoiding defining the meaning of revolutionary movement is that we leave to the individual idiosyncracies of the various Provincial Governments or the members in charge of the Government of India at any particular time to understand what is meant by a revolutionary movement. If there is a movement in India which the officers consider to be far too progressive to have any chance of practical realisation in the early future, and that agitation to achieve that ideal would be accompanied or is likely to be accompanied by wrong methods, the Government may straight away say this is a revolutionary movement, on the mere chance of some individuals in the pursuit of a high ideal, which according to the officials may not be capable of immediate realisation, being likely to resort to unlawful methods. I have only to read the proceedings of the Madras Legislative Council on the 24th May, 1917, which are popularly believed were to a certain degree influenced by a circular issued by the Home Department of the Government of India, to convince the members of the Council that the fears that I express here are not altogether of an imaginary character. Questions were put in this Council as to whether a circular was not issued by the Government of India in the Home Department inviting the attention of Provincial Governments to the initiating and propagation of movements such as the Home Rule movement calculated to put ideals in the minds of people, which are of a visionary character and which may be likely to be attended by wrong methods. As I have put it, I have absolutely no objection whatsoever and nobody can have any objection whatsoever to wrong methods, to incorrect methods, to improper methods, to violent methods, being put down with a stern, strong hand at any time whatsoever, but it is the danger that the officials may think that a particular movement may be propagating or preaching a distant ideal which would or may be accompanied by wrong methods on the part of individuals, it is that which I am deprecating. Of course the circular was not placed on the table, but several persons who were supposed to have seen it, or who said that they had seen it, have published statements in the newspapers which, as far as I know, have not been corrected, that the Government of India took alarm at the propagation of these movements, I mean especially the Home Rule movement and His Excellency Lord Pentland, winding up the proceedings of the Legislative Council on the 24th of May, 1917, alluded in specific terms to these distant ideals being a source of trouble and also deprecating the employment of wrong methods.

“ In so far as that speech is concerned, with the warning given against the employment of wrong methods I have not a word to say, but I respectfully submit that the rest of it is a warning to Legislatures as well as to the Government of India. Here is what His Lordship said :

‘ Here and now it is impossible for us to say what reforms in this respect will be proposed for India at the close of the War.’

He was deprecating any agitation during the course of the war to secure reforms for India.

‘ Whatever they may be, they will fall far short of the proposals to which I have alluded.’

that is the Congress ideals, although later on there was a Press Communiqué saying that exception was not taken to the Congress ideals as such.

‘ Yet there is no sign of the relaxation of this agitation and the educated classes in India are being led to expect that which will not come and in some cases that which they know will not come. It is obvious that this situation contains elements of misunderstanding, of difficulty and possibly of friction’.

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

He then goes on :

‘ For any such difficulties the leaders of this agitation and all who support and sympathise with them will be directly responsible. Against all advice and warning they have initiated and persist in this agitation at a most unsuitable time.’

Then the speech warns against the employment of incorrect methods, but it is the last portion that I want to emphasise :

‘ And on behalf of my Government I call upon all who hear me or read these words for their support in any action that the Government may be forced to take to discourage these unwise and dangerous methods.’

I will again repeat against that I have no objection.

‘and the extravagant aims which they are designed to further.’

Therefore, my Lord, any movement, a legitimate movement which the Government of Great Britain has recognised to be a legitimate movement moving towards self-government as rapidly as circumstances permit,—any movement of that character which may be out of harmony with the existing state of things, may be honestly construed by zealous officers as a movement fraught with danger to the country. If you do not define the term ‘ revolutionary movement ’ it may mean a movement so far in excess of the present conditions, or so far in advance of the present conditions, as to revolutionise the existing state of things. Thus if we have the present bureaucratic government, where everything is done by the Government, a change of that into self-government will be distinctly revolutionary. Would not a person working for a revolutionary movement of such a character come within the term ‘ revolutionary ’ unless the Legislature defines and limits the scope and meaning of the words? It is that object, and that object only, that I have in view in moving this amendment. The words I have chosen may not be happy, and it is for the wisdom of the Legislature to devise any other words if they think that the object I have at heart has to be achieved. But I think the words I have chosen are apt and will serve the purpose which I have in view. I therefore respectfully move that this amendment may be accepted.”

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—“ My Lord, I beg to support the amendment that has just been put before the Council by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. It seems to me that it is consistent with the avowed object of this Bill and with the declared policy of Government which is responsible for this measure. The expression ‘ revolutionary movement ’ is not an expression of law. It is a phrase of political language, and it seems to me, my Lord, that it would really be extremely useful if you could give some sort of a definition for the guidance of Courts of law. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma has pointed out the dangers lurking in the Bill if you do not give any positive definition of an expression like that. I do not suggest for a moment that it will be deliberately abused; but that it may be abused I do not think anyone can say is an impossibility. Therefore, in order to enable the Courts to come to correct conclusions, and also to assure the public mind that the proper test is being applied by the Executive Government in taking action under a measure like this, it seems to me that it is very necessary that you should give some sort of an explanation. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's amendment seeks to define the expression here as a movement which is directed to the overthrow by force of His Majesty's established Government in India. My Lord, I think that it brings out very well the meaning of the expression, so far as it is capable of being defined in connection with this Bill, and it is consistent with the Government's policy. I therefore very strongly support this measure.”

11-31 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—“ My Lord, I wish to support this motion. As a matter of fact I was thinking of sending notice of a similar amendment, but I found that my list was already too long and I therefore refrained from doing so. When I found my friend the Hon'ble

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Sir George Lowndes.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

Mr. Sarma contemplated putting down an amendment to this effect, I encouraged him. He asked me if the Calcutta High Court anywhere defined revolutionary movement. I said I do not think it is possible for a High Court to frame a definition, and I think it is very necessary that this should be done here, so that there may be no difficulty hereafter in construing the Act."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My Lord, I support the amendment. I would draw attention to the phraseology that has been used in the Preamble of the Bill where the object of the Bill is defined to be dealing with 'anarchical and revolutionary movements.' The Act is called the 'Anarchical and Revolutionary Crimes Act,' which is more definite than 'movements.' Then the word 'movement' occurs in section 3 of the Bill—'If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that, in the whole or any part of British India, anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted'. In view, therefore, of what my friends the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru have said, it seems very desirable that the expression 'revolutionary movements' should be made more definite and clear. The use of the word 'Crimes' in the title of the Act suggests a solution which may be acceptable to the Government. If you substitute the word 'crimes' in place of the word 'movements' the object will be gained.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, I rise to a point of order. We have no amendment to that effect. The Hon'ble Member is not supporting the amendment before the Council, but moving an entirely different one."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Without moving an amendment, I am perfectly within my right to support, with arguments, any amendment that is before the Council. That is what I am doing. I know as well as the Hon'ble the Law Member that I have not given notice of any such amendment. I draw attention to the language used in the Bill in support of the argument which I am placing before Council in support of the amendment of my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma; and I say if the word 'crimes' were used instead of 'movements,' that would have been consistent with section 1 of the Act where the title of the Act is defined. As this has not been done, it becomes very necessary that in order to prevent any such conflict of opinion arising as is apprehended, 'revolutionary movement' should be defined. My Lord, as my friends the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru and the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma have pointed out, revolutionary movements may be of a perfectly innocuous character, absolutely unconnected with any crime; and nobody knows better than my English friends, whose literature and history have frequently had to deal with revolutionary movements of different characters, that it would take people somewhat by surprise if they were asked to take it that revolutionary movements meant only criminal movements. Unless the phrase is defined, it is liable to be misconstrued, and there is danger of that misconception leading some petulant Governor to take action under the Act which will not be justifiable and which will not commend itself to any sensible man. We have in the history of the past few years very unhappy experiences of how expressions used for one purpose have been misconstrued and used for other purposes. The language of the Defence of India Act Rules has been so misconstrued in the opinion of a number of people. Therefore I submit, my Lord, that there should be no room left for doubt and dispute, and for an apprehension in the public mind that at a time when political agitation may assume virility and vigour some petulant Governor might feel nervous and might take action under the provisions of this Act.

"That is not what your Excellency intends should be done; that is not what I take it your Excellency's Government intends should be done. Therefore, the request is absolutely reasonable that the matter should be placed beyond doubt by defining revolutionary movement as has been suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir George Lowndes ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, one is almost tired of reiterating both in this Council and outside it that this Bill is not aimed at constitutional agitation of any sort or kind. I hope that this may be the last time when it may be necessary to reiterate that statement in the discussions on the Bill. Then, with regard to this amendment and what has been said on it. These words were inserted in the Bill at the express and unanimous request of all the non-official Members forming part of the Select Committee, of which my Hon'ble friend the Pandit was one.....

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" May I rise, my Lord, to a point of order. I am not sure that my friend is right in saying what he has said. We wanted that the scope of the Bill should be confined to revolutionary and anarchical crime ; we understood that that would be done ; I am not sure that we wanted the word ' movements ' to be put in there. When the modified clause was put in, there was no discussion upon it."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I am only dealing with the question of the word ' revolutionary. ' The Hon'ble Pandit appears unable to understand that there is no amendment with regard to the word ' movement. ' It might have been more reasonable if he had asked for a definition of ' movement ' than for a definition of ' revolutionary ' ; but we have no amendment to that effect. These words ' revolutionary ' and ' anarchical ' were, I repeat, put in at the request of the non-official Members of the Committee, of whom my Hon'ble friend the Pandit was one, and he did not suggest in the Committee, nor did any Member of the Committee suggest that it was necessary to define the word ' revolutionary '. And for very good reason. It was quite recognised in the Committee as has been stated by my friend, Dr. Sapru, that ' revolutionary ' is not a legal term at all. It is not an expression of law ; it is not a technical expression in any way, nor do we use it or seek to use it in this Bill in any but its popular and dictionary sense. We do not insert definitions of a word in a Bill under any circumstances if it is merely the popular sense in which it is used ; we leave that to be ascertained from the dictionary. My Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, appears to me to be on the horns of a dilemma. Either he uses the word in the ordinary dictionary meaning in which case we may leave it to be looked up in the dictionary, or he uses it in some special sense which was not the amendment accepted by Government in Select Committee. It was definitely accepted in the Select Committee by Government at the request of Hon'ble Members in the ordinary dictionary meaning of the word, and it is that meaning on which we rely now. There is no good attempting to attach volume after volume of Murray's dictionary to a Bill like this ; it will not help any one. When a Judge or any one else—even a ' petulant Governor '—wants to know what the word ' revolutionary ' means, he can go to the dictionary and look it up there, and then possibly the petulant Governor may fall into an error, because the dictionary would tell him that it either means an attempt to overthrow the established government of a country or the motion of a celestial body in moving round a particular orbit. If the Council really thinks that there is any danger of even a petulant Governor being led into error by those two variations in the dictionary, there may be something to be said for the amendment. But in the circumstances, I regret Government must oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I would ask the Hon'ble Member if he has heard of the revolution in Japan in 1868."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I am afraid if my Hon'ble friend asks me, I must say I have not heard it called that."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—" Your Excellency, I had the honour of sitting on the Select Committee, and I was one of those who recommended the adoption of the word ' revolutionary '. I was not unaware at the time of the meaning of the word in the ordinary sense. But it is now pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma that it might include peaceful revolutions. My Hon'ble friend, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, is not perhaps quite right to call what took place in Japan in 1868 a revolution; it is often called the restoration. But it had the character of a revolution in one sense, and people, if we are to accept the ordinary dictionary sense as the Hon'ble the Law Member advises us to do, would be found frequently using the word 'revolutionary' in innocent ways, absolutely unsuggestive of anything criminal. For example, in recent political debates in India, the Montagu-Chelmsford report has been often described as revolutionary; the Congress-League scheme was described by even a larger number of people as revolutionary. Many opinions that we express here without suggestion of the Penal Code at all are described as revolutionary. Talk of the republic in England would certainly be revolutionary in the ordinary dictionary sense, but I have not heard yet of any people who talked of republican institutions in England being marched off to the jail. Nor have I heard still, although perhaps a very strict censorship is established over the cable, of the recent Sinn Fein movement having been yet caught, held up by the police, because it has not done anything more than peacefully sitting down. . . .

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri; Sir George Lowndes; [13TH MARCH, 1919.]
Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"My Lord, I think the Hon'ble Member ought to know that the Sinn Fein movement has not only been found to be revolutionary but, I believe, a large number, I think over a 100, of Sinn Feiners, are at this moment interned in Ireland or in England."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—"On account of the recent talk of Sinn Fein revolution?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—"That is certainly news. In these ways, omitting the last point about Sinn Fein, it seems to me that there is a danger, which, I am very sorry to say I did not think of at the time I sat in Select Committee, of the word 'revolutionary' being taken to apply even to suggestions of radical political reform which has no basis whatever in or connected with anything anarchical. I suppose a strict lawyer would say that when we use the word 'revolutionary' alongside of the word 'anarchical,' it would be impossible for such an interpretation to be put upon it. But, occasionally, people may use the word in that sense and I see nothing harmful in defining the word 'revolutionary,' so that it might apply only to those movements which are sought to be carried out by the application of force. Supposing, for example, it were possible by a mere majority opinion almost universal, overwhelming us, to establish a very different form of Government to that which is now established, it might be revolutionary in its character, certainly will be according to the dictionary sense, but it need not be necessarily such as to call for the application of any criminal law. It is to avoid that, I think, that Mr. Sarma desires to define the expression 'revolutionary movement' as that which is sought to be carried out by the application of force. I see no particular harm in doing it. On the contrary, I see some advantage, and therefore, although I sat in the Select Committee and was responsible for the use of this word without asking for a definition of it, I think now I might change my mind, which is not legally trained, and support the amendment moved by Mr. Sarma."

11-48 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—My Lord, I desire to associate my self with the remarks that have fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri. I was one of those who asked for the insertion of the term 'revolutionary and anarchical'. The Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill at once accepted my request, and we have to record our acknowledgments for this and many other concessions of the same kind. The point did not arise at the time, it occurred to nobody that this word 'revolutionary' movement might be used in the sense in which it has been suggested and inasmuch as a difficulty has arisen, I think it ought to be met. There is no harm in accepting the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma in inserting a definition, as the matter is now under consideration. It does not in the least interfere with the scope or character of the Bill, but makes the object more clear, more transparent. I trust the Hon'ble the Home Member will see his way to accept the amendment of my Hon'ble friend."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi ; Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Sir George Lowndes.]

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—

"My Lord, I associate myself with what has fallen from the lips of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri and the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea. But there are one or two points to which I would like to draw the attention of the Hon'ble the Law Member. It is perfectly true that the Government in this Council has declared in express terms that this Bill is intended to put down anarchical and revolutionary crimes, and that intention has been embodied in certain parts of the Bill. The Hon'ble the Law Member, however, is, I am sure, perfectly aware of the ruling which has been given, I believe, also by their Lordships of the Privy Council, but most certainly by the Indian High Courts, that a declaration by the Hon'ble Member in charge of a Bill or speeches delivered in the Legislative Council during the debate on the Bill are utterly irrelevant to the construing of the Statute when it comes before a court of law. The advantages of making the language absolutely clear and placing the real intention beyond all possibility of dispute are obvious. We know full well that expressions even clearer than these have been differently construed by different High Courts. That being so I also appeal to the Hon'ble the Home Member to accept the amendment. After all it is calculated to place the intentions of the Government beyond all possible doubt."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—"My Lord, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi has said just now, no amount of speeches on behalf of the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill will avail for one single moment when we come to a court of law to construe the Statute. The Hon'ble the Law Member showed a great deal of annoyance on this point and said: 'We have no desire to interfere with constitutional movements.' There is no need for indignation; we know that the Government have said that over and over again. There is no need for repeating it. We know that you say you do not wish to interfere with political movements. But the Bill is now before the Council and we are responsible for this Bill which is going to become law, and therefore, my Lord, we cannot take too much care in considering every single clause in this Bill before it leaves the Council. Then the Hon'ble the Law Member says that in the Select Committee Non-official Members on the one side and the Government on the other side have agreed to this. But if you have agreed to this, is not this Council or any Member entitled to point out something new and say 'although you have agreed to a particular phraseology, yet there is a flaw in it?' Is this Council merely a machine? Because in the Select Committee the Government, on the one side and those who were appointed Members of the Select Committee have agreed to a certain clause, is it not open to us to point out that there is some flaw? Is this the answer?.....

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I think my Hon'ble friend has misunderstood me. I did not mean to suggest that. In the Select Committee we accepted the dictionary sense of the word. It was a compromise on this basis and nothing more."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—"That is what I object to; this is not a question of a compromise; this is going to become a part of the law of this country; it is not a question of compromise. What you have to do is to make your intention clear. Is this clause right or is it not? That is the question that the Council has got to consider. Some may have had the privilege of being on the Select Committee, every member of this Council cannot be, but we are entitled to say ' here is a flaw and we press on you that that should be put right. ' I attach no importance to your compromise. I do not wish to add a single word to the reasons that have been already advanced in support of the amendment. I hope the Government will see that there is no answer to this point."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" The argument has been advanced by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi and the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah that statements made in this Council are not binding on the Courts. I agree. But can they point out to me any clause in this Bill under which the words ' revolutionary crime ' will come before a Court ? "

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—" My Lord, I am prepared to answer that. If the Hon'ble Member will turn to the preamble he will find the following :—' Whereas it is expedient to make provision that the ordinary criminal law should be supplemented and emergency powers should be exerciseable by the Government for the purpose of dealing with anarchical and revolutionary movements. ' Then in clause 3 it is said ' If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that in the whole or any part of British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted. ' In several parts the Hon'ble the Law Member will find these words ' revolutionary movements ' repeated in various places, and they have a very important bearing on the various sections and the consequences will be such.....

His Excellency the President :—" I think the Hon'ble Member should not make a speech when he is asked a question."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I have here the ' Concise Oxford Dictionary ' and it would be well if we had this point settled, as once the Government has resolved on a particular course of action, it is hard to get it changed."

His Excellency the President :—" I cannot see, Mr. Sarma, that anybody has taken his authority from that book."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, this is obviously a matter of drafting in which the Government must be guided by the advice of the expert department. Apart from the question of this compromise—there really was no compromise, but a suggestion which we accepted.—Apart from that and on the merits I can see no adequate reason for making any change in the clause as drafted. It is a little surprising that, as we had a number of lawyers on the Select Committee, some member of the Committee did not raise the point then. If this had been done we could have had it further examined. It would be a little more considerate to Government if points of this kind were raised in Select Committee rather than afterwards. I do not want to put it higher than that or suggest that a member of the Committee is precluded from raising the point later. On the general question I submit that to the man in the street the meaning of the word ' revolutionary ' is perfectly clear. Moreover, if Hon'ble Members will refer to the Bill they will see that it is throughout used in connection with the term ' anarchical. ' I do not think in such circumstances it is capable of any misinterpretation. Further, if I may refer again to the Bill, Hon'ble Members will see that it can only be applied to criminal movements and wherever you get the words ' revolutionary movement ' there is immediately afterwards a reference to offences. For instance, if you look at Part I it says: ' If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that in the whole or any part of

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir William Vincent ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.]

British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted and that scheduled offences in connection with such movements are prevalent.' That indicates sufficiently what the character of the revolutionary movements mentioned in the Bill are if indeed any further explanation were necessary. Part II says: ' If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that anarchical or revolutionary movements which are

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea :—" There is a disjunctive ' or ' between the words ' anarchical ' and ' revolutionary '."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I am not speaking of the disjunctive, but I refer to the reference to offences which follows. ' If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that anarchical or revolutionary movements, which are, in his opinion, likely to lead to the commission of scheduled offences are being extensively promoted in the whole or any part of British India,' and so on. In Part III again, the wording used is the same as in Part I. In these circumstances, having regard to the use of the word ' anarchical ' and the reference to offences which follows, I cannot see myself that there is any possibility of this word ' revolutionary ' being misinterpreted. The only suggestion of actual misinterpretation that I heard was when it was said that the word ' revolutionary ' was sometimes used even in criticism of the Reforms Report or such documents as the Congress and Moslem League Reforms Scheme. My Lord, the word revolution may be loosely used by partisan newspapers, but it does not follow that responsible authorities will so interpret it, or that they will not interpret the language of the Bill with much more care and accuracy.

" The only other matter to which I need refer is one raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi. He said that what was said in Council was of no importance. Courts would have no regard to speeches made here in interpreting the Act. That, I believe, is a perfectly correct statement. I myself should be prepared to accept it at any rate. But what was pointed out, and what I think he did not quite understand was that throughout this Act, there is no question of the Court deciding whether a movement is revolutionary or anarchical. I take the very clauses cited by the Hon'ble Member. (Clause 3.) It begins: ' If the Governor General is satisfied that, in the whole or any part of British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted, and that scheduled offences in connection with such movements are prevalent to such an extent, he may make a notification

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—" It shall be open to an accused person when he is called upon before the Court to say that the offence which he has committed has nothing to do with any revolutionary movement."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I am attempting to read the clause in the Bill from which these words are used, and I submit that from clause 3 it is evident that the authority to decide under that section whether a movement is revolutionary or anarchical is the Governor General in Council and not the Court; the position is the same in regard to all the other sections. I do not think it has ever been suggested—and I hope it will never be suggested—that the Government of India is not bound by authoritative statements made in this Council. I know that whenever we have or are supposed to have diverged at all from any undertaking, Hon'ble Members are ready enough, if I may say so, to accuse us of having done so wrongly. It is only a few minutes ago that I gave an undertaking not to issue a notification bringing this Act into force before the conclusion of the war, and I should like to know whether Hon'ble Members think that that is not an undertaking which is binding upon Government. Part II again begins thus: ' If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that anarchical or revolutionary movements ' and so on. Here, again, there is no question at all of the Courts. Part III is exactly the same again ' If the Governor General in Council is satisfied.' Therefore, my Lord, the only persons who will decide the meaning of these particular words are the executive authorities. I do not think it can be urged for one moment that the interpretation suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma can be applied to this word by the Government, and the Courts will not have to interpret it at all."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I am generally a very great optimist and therefore expend perhaps unnecessary energy and enthusiasm in an unreal debate, but I shall not for the moment lose my optimism but will still try to persuade the Government to think of a possible change if reason be shown in that direction. What are the grounds, your Excellency, upon which the opposition of the Government to my amendment is based? The grounds are (1) The Select Committee has not suggested it and that these words were more or less adopted in deference to their wishes; and (2) it is unnecessary to insert any definition. Mark, my Lord, there was not one word said that the adoption of the definition that I have suggested would cripple the Government in any way, would divert legislation from its proper object, or would in any way handicap the objects which the Government have in view. All that has been said is that it is superfluous; and we give you our word of honour, we do not mean any such thing, and therefore why do you ask for superfluous words to be inserted in this artistically drawn up Bill. I submit, my Lord, even the artistic taste may perhaps be sacrificed a little to satisfy, rather to remove, the fears entertained by so many Hon'ble Members inside the Council and by many people outside this Council. Let that alone. But are we really correct in assuming that the definition of the word 'revolution' that has been suggested as being a dictionary definition is a correct one, or that it is the only meaning? I find that even Murray gives the meanings of the word 'revolution' as 'alteration,' 'change,' 'mutation,' 'an instance of a great change or alteration in affairs or in some particular thing'. Of course, no doubt he follows it by saying 'a plot to over-throw an established Government in any country or State by those who are previously subject to a forcible substitution of a new rule or form of Government' I find above that 'an instance of a great change or alteration in affairs or some particular thing'. That is, a revolutionary movement may mean under the definition given in Murray's dictionary, a movement directed to bring about a great change or alteration in affairs or in some particular thing. We have at present only 6 or 7 per cent. of officers in the military services. If we ask for 50 or 60 per cent. it is a great, violent change having very important effects; therefore it is a revolutionary movement. So in almost every department any change of a very drastic character would be a revolutionary change, and any movement directed towards that change, towards obtaining that change, would be a revolutionary movement even according to my reading of Murray's Dictionary. It may be that my poor intellect cannot quite grasp what an English dictionary meant for its readers to grasp, but there is that meaning.

"If it is capable of that meaning, as it may be, that dictionary definition ought not to be employed too long and too largely for the purpose of saying no change shall be adopted. The attention of the Council has already been invited to the fact that in section 20 and various other sections the words 'revolutionary movement' are employed disjunctively, distinctly from anarchical movements. So a movement may be strictly constitutional, but if it is revolutionary in the sense I have suggested, it is open to the Governor General in Council to proclaim it as coming within that definition. I submit, my Lord, especially as the aid of judicial courts has been denied to us, there can be no harm in accepting the Government at their own word and saying 'put in that definition which would give us an assurance that it is what you mean.' There can be no harm in that. I therefore hope that the Government will not be annoyed by our putting forward amendments intended to bring out the sense clearly in the way in which they ought to, although perhaps it may be unnecessary to do so. This is a matter of very great importance and umbrage can be taken under the vague use of such terms for doing things which perhaps the authors of this Bill do not contemplate."

The amendment was therefore negatived.

The motion that clause 2 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, the amendment I 12-16 P.M. have the honour to move is that Part I be deleted. The object of this Part is to secure the speedy trial of certain offences. That is the only object for which this particular Part seems to be proposed. Now how is this object to be secured? In the first place, instead of laying the complaint in the ordinary way before the Magistrate, you have a provision to lay it before a Chief Justice. In the second place, you have the special tribunal to try the case. Thirdly, there is to be no jury in such cases and fourthly, there is to be no appeal. This is how it is proposed to bring about a speedy trial of certain offences. In ordinary trials, as we understand them, we have in the first place the police investigation, then the inquiry before a Magistrate, thirdly, the trial before a Court of Sessions, and, fourthly, the appeal to the High Court. This, it is alleged, takes a good deal of time, and as it is necessary that in certain cases there should be a speedy trial, this Part is proposed to be introduced. Well, here, the authors of the Bill seem to have lost sight of the powers Government already possess. Besides the ordinary procedure, they have got the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908. And what are its provisions? You have in the Criminal Law Amendment Act already a provision for a special tribunal consisting of three judges. I invite the attention of this Council to section 11 of the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act (XIV of 1908), which says:—

[Mr. V. J. Patel.]

‘ All persons sent for trial to the High Court under this Act, shall be tried by a special bench of the court composed of three judges. ’

The trial before the Sessions Court is altogether dispensed with, and such trial is to take place before the special tribunal consisting of three judges of the High Court. Then the section proceeds further and says:—

‘ No trial before the special bench shall be by jury. ’

So that you have another provision, as you have in this Bill, namely, that such trials shall be by the special bench only without the assistance of a jury. So, as I say, the only difference that I can find, reading the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908 and the provisions of this Bill, is that a procedure for commitment proceedings is retained under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, while there are no commitment proceedings under the provisions of this Bill. With regard to these commitment proceedings, however, I beg to draw the attention of the Council to section 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, which lays down that ‘ the accused shall not be present during an inquiry under section 3, sub-section (1), unless the Magistrate so directs, nor shall he be represented by a pleader during such inquiry, nor shall any person have any right of access to the court of the Magistrate while he is holding such inquiry. ’

“ So that the commitment proceedings contemplated by the Criminal Law Amendment Act are merely ex parte proceedings occupying as little time as possible. Instead of laying the information before the Chief Justice, as proposed in the present Bill, you have only to lay it before a Magistrate. The Magistrate then examines witnesses for the prosecution and at once commits the case direct to the High Court, and the trial takes place before the Special Bench consisting of three judges without any jury. Then again, there is no provision for appeal in the Criminal Law Amendment Act. So that, all the conditions, namely, the absence of a jury, the absence of an appeal, and the trial by a special tribunal, are satisfied, excepting, as I say, the provisions regarding commitment proceedings, which are under the Criminal Law Amendment Act merely ex parte. ”

“ You will ask me why then did the Rowlatt Committee recommend this measure? My reading of the Report of the Rowlatt Committee gives me the impression that the Rowlatt Committee seems to have lost sight of the fact that the commitment proceedings under the Criminal Law Amendment Act are ex parte. I will invite the attention of the Council to paragraph 181 on page 145 of the Rowlatt Committee's Report. First, they talk of juries :

‘ We think it necessary to exclude juries and assessors mainly because of the terrorism to which they are liable. But terrorism apart, we do not think they can be relied upon in this class of case. They are too much inclined to be affected by public discussion. We could give instances which have come before us, where we think there have been miscarriages of justice owing to the causes above mentioned. We may further point out that the trial of such cases without jury or assessors was introduced by the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908. ’

“ Then they go on and say—

‘ As regards the procedure and the absence of right of appeal, we think it essential that the delay involved in commitment proceedings and appeal be avoided. It is of the utmost importance that punishment or acquittal should be speedy both in order to secure the moral effect which punishment should produce and also to prevent the prolongation of the excitement which the proceedings may set up. Furthermore, the delays involved by commitment proceedings (and those are the words to which I would particularly invite the attention of the Council) and the double examination of witnesses increases the chance of the witnesses being intimidated, add to the hardships involved in their attendance with the consequence of making them less ready to come forward, and also afford time for them to forget the facts'.

"So it seems to me that the Rowlatt Committee apparently thought that during the commitment proceedings under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, witnesses would be cross-examined and then they would again be cross-examined before the special bench of the three High Court Judges. That is really not so. Under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the procedure is that the commitment proceedings are to take place ex-parte; the accused is not to be present, no pleader will appear, the accused has no right of even any access to the court. That being so, there will be no delay as the Committee seems to think, and there will be no double cross-examination of witnesses as the Committee suggests. The only advantage the accused has under the Criminal Law Amendment Act is that by this procedure of having the witnesses examined before the Magistrate he exactly knows, when he is tried before the High Court, what the charge against him is, what the evidence against him is. As soon as the case is committed to the High Court, according to one of the sections, copies of the depositions recorded by the Magistrate are to be given to the accused. So he exactly knows what case he has got to meet. That advantage is now proposed to be taken away; beyond that I see no difference. I know there is one more provision in the proposed Bill, namely, that the accused may be examined as a witness on oath if he expresses his desire to the court to be so examined. The Part is intended with a view to securing speedy trial of certain offences, but the provision regarding the examination of the accused is calculated in my humble opinion to lengthen the proceedings rather than secure speedy trial, because, if the accused is cross-examined, new matters may be brought to light, with the result that the prosecution might ask the court to examine further witnesses on behalf of the Crown to meet those new matters, and the accused might also request the court to call witnesses on his behalf in regard to such matters.

"Anyhow, the object with which the Part is proposed to be enacted will be frustrated by the provision regarding the examination of the accused. I therefore think that this Part is absolutely unnecessary in view of the powers which the Government already possess, unless of course it is simply introduced for the purpose of inserting a provision for the examination of an accused person. I trust, therefore, that the Government will rest content with the powers which they already possess under the Criminal Law Amendment Act—powers which are really very drastic and one should have thought the time had arrived for a repeal of that Act. There is thus absolutely no case made out for the enactment of the proposed Part, and I trust Government will drop it."

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett:—"My Lord, I only rise to explain that the last sentence in the second clause of paragraph 181 of the Rowlatt Report, which says—

'We may further point out that the trial of such cases without jury or assessors was introduced by the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908', in no way governs what follows. The next clause is entirely separate and merely goes on to say that the Committee considers that commitment proceedings should be avoided. It gives the reason why. The last sentence of the second clause in no way governs the third clause."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay:—"My Lord, the Hon'ble Mr. Patel has made my case easier by arguing simply that these provisions are already practically on the Statute-book and therefore are unnecessary. He has not attacked the provisions themselves, and it is not therefore necessary for me to go into any great detail as to the reasons for which we require Part I.

12-30 P.M.

[Sir James DuBoulay ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; Mr. M. A. Jinnah.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

" We want to set up special tribunals only in the case of these revolutionary and anarchical movements. In places where scheduled offences are prevalent, a special procedure is to be followed with the object of avoiding lengthy proceedings; and our reason for desiring this is the excessive prolongation of the trials which have occurred in certain conspiracy cases, of which many examples must be in the minds of Hon'ble Members of this Council. I need only mention the Alipur Conspiracy case, the Howrah Gang case and the Barisal Conspiracy case. In each of those cases from the time the accused came before the Magistrate to the time judgment was passed by the Court to which the trial was committed there was an interval of more than a year

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Were all those cases tried before a Special Bench or before the Ordinary Bench ?"

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—" Some before the Special Bench, and some before the ordinary Courts. The abuses of such prolonged proceedings are fairly obvious, and the Rowlatt Committee who went into this matter very carefully arrived at the conclusion that the delay involved by these dilatory proceedings and the subsequent appeal should be avoided. They gave very good reasons. I need not quote them all, but in paragraph 181 which Mr. Patel has already referred to the following will be found :—

' It is of the utmost importance ' they say, ' that punishment or acquittal should be speedy both in order to secure the moral effect which punishment should produce and also to prevent the prolongation of the excitement which the proceedings may set up '.

Very often it is a very unwholesome excitement among students and others who may be interested in these trials. The Committee specially refer to the delays involved by commitment proceedings and the double examination of witnesses; they point out that this not only increases the chance of witnesses being intimidated, but adds to the hardships involved in their attendance, with the consequence that they are less ready to come forward, and further likely to forget the facts of the case on which they are going to give evidence.

" There is the argument, which we must all sympathise with, that you must not have a speedy trial at the risk of a miscarriage of justice. But, I think, it would be casting an unmerited slur on the ability, the intelligence and the fairness of the Judges of our High Courts if Hon'ble Members endorsed those arguments by supporting this amendment. We all want justice, but it is preposterous to suggest that in the special tribunals which this law will set up, we shall have anything else. I find it difficult to believe that there is anybody in this Council who does not believe that there are very serious evils in these delays in the administration of justice; and I find it equally difficult to believe that there is anyone here who does not feel that something ought to be done. And here we have the strongest possible Committee, composed of men whose instincts and training all tend to make them set their faces like a rock against anything in the nature of injustice, making a proposal of the nature we have embodied in the Bill. We have adopted their proposal and we have made some small modifications in the Select Committee, and these will come up for discussion hereafter when the other amendments are taken up for consideration. But it seems to me that this Part I, though it may be open to modification in points of detail, embodies a vital principle of the Bill. I submit that the Council have already expressed their opinion on this principle of the Bill when they agreed to refer it to the Select Committee, and that they would be stultifying themselves now if they supported this amendment. "

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—" It seems to me, my Lord, that the Hon'ble Member who spoke on behalf of the Government has not appreciated the point of Mr. Patel's amendment. Mr. Patel's point, as I understood, was this. The Act of 1908 which was avowedly passed for this purpose, as the Preamble shows: ' An Act to provide for the more speedy trial of offences.....dangerous to the public peace'. Therefore the object of that Act was, firstly, speedy trial. The object of the first Part of the Bill now before the Council is also speedy trial. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel does not quarrel with that at all. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel says 'You have already got a Statute which is called the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, and if your object is to have a speedy trial, or I will put it in this way, my Lord, a speedier trial, if you please, why don't you amend the Statute which is already in existence?' That is the point. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel as I understand him says that instead of doing that you have practically reproduced that Statute, with some modifications. One would have thought, my Lord, that the proper course, the simplest course, was to amend that Act if you want a speedier trial. If that alone was the object of the Government, I am sure, my Lord, that in this Council with regard to that object the Government would have received a great deal of sympathy and support. But I cannot really understand what is the object of the Government in repeating Statutes. You have got one already on the Statute-book, you want to have another."

[13TH MARCH, 1919]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Lord, I support the amendment which has been put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel. One advantage, to which attention has not been drawn, of the existing law to which reference has been made, namely, Act XIV of 1908, is that it is stated in the first clause of it that the Act will apply to the Province of Bengal, Eastern Bengal and Assam, and that the Governor General in Council may by notification in the Gazette of India extend the whole or any part thereof to any other Province. My Lord, from all we have heard and read, it would seem that if any justification can be pleaded for passing an Act of the nature proposed, though we dispute that there is such justification, it is to be found in the state of things in Bengal. Now this Act XIV of 1908 is already in force in Bengal. It has not yet been shown that there is any necessity for extending this Act to any other province. I do not mean to say that I am satisfied that there is necessity for enforcing such an Act in Bengal; but assuming that there is, it has not been shown that there is any necessity for applying such an enactment as is proposed in any other province. Secondly, several of the most important provisions of Act XIV of 1908 are the same as those which it is proposed to re-enact in Part I of the Bill before us. For that reason also it seems unnecessary that Part I should be re-enacted. It has been said that section 3 of the present Bill prescribes the conditions in which it is proposed that the enactment should be extended or applied to a particular province. But the language of the Preamble of Act XIV of 1908 is wide enough to cover cases that are likely to be taken up under the proposed enactment.

"My Lord, the next point on which I wish to say a few words is one which has already been mentioned by my other friends who have spoken before me, that is, the question of a speedy trial. I once more submit that it is not the right thing for the Government to desire a speedy trial. My Lord, I referred yesterday to the Prevention of Crimes Act of Ireland of 1882. That was an Act passed when two foul murders had taken place in Phoenix Park, and the whole of the United Kingdom had been stirred to its depths by the wickedness of the crimes. But even at such a time the Act which was passed by Parliament to deal with such crimes, sought to provide for a fair and impartial trial. It did not seek to provide for the speedy trial of offences. 'A fair and impartial trial' are the words which are used in the Act itself. I cannot think, my Lord, why the Government should not shudder to think of the consequences of a speedy trial when such a trial may end in the obliteration of a fellowman from existence. I submit, therefore, that it is bad enough that there should be one Statute like Act XIV of 1908 on the Statute-book. It will be doubly bad to add one more Statute of the same character to the Statute-book, particularly when the objects served by the two Statutes would be almost entirely the same. My Lord, if the Government will consider this aspect of the question, I hope it will yet see that it is moving in the wrong direction. There is no doubt one difference. Act XIV of 1908 provides for the speedy trial of certain offences, but yet it does not do away with commitment proceedings. Commitment proceedings are to be had when the Local Government or the Governor General in Council thinks that proceedings in respect of any offence mentioned in the Schedule thereto—and the Schedules also are very much similar to the Schedule proposed here—should be tried according to the provisions of Part I of Act XIV of 1908. They are to make an order in writing to that effect, and on receipt of such an order the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the offence, or any other Magistrate to whom the case has been transferred, shall proceed to inquire whether the evidence offered upon the part of the prosecution is sufficient to put the accused upon his trial for an offence specified in the Schedule. Witnesses are to be examined by the Magistrate on oath, any statement which the accused may voluntarily tender is to be recorded. If the Magistrate is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out against the accused, he is to frame a charge against the accused, and make an order directing that the accused be sent for trial to the High Court where a Special Bench of the Court consisting of three judges is to be constituted to try the case. Now, my Lord, commitment proceedings were also to be gone through under the Irish Act. It was left to Sir Michael O'Dwyer to suggest in the communication which he made to the Government of India in 1914, that commitment proceedings, as well as the provision for appeal, should be eliminated. The Ordinance that he suggested was taken as the basis of the Defence of India Act and the rules made thereunder, as the Rowlatt Committee have stated in their report. I submit, my Lord, that matters stood in a very different position in 1914, and measures which were adopted in view of the situation in 1914-15 should not be re-enacted now when the war is ended and conditions are entirely different from what they were in that year. There is no justification yet shown why there should be speed secured. The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett drew attention to certain portions of paragraph 181 of the Rowlatt Committee Report. The Committee say there that it is of the utmost importance that punishment or acquittal should be speedy, both in order to secure the moral effect which punishment should produce, and also to prevent the prolongation of the excitement which the proceedings may set up. Now, my Lord, that does not take into account the danger of injustice which may be perpetrated upon the accused. They also go on to say: 'Furthermore, the delays involved by commitment proceedings and the double examination of witnesses increase the chance of the witnesses being intimidated, add to the hardships involved in their attendance with the consequence of making them less ready to come forward, and also afford time for them to forget the facts'. With regard to the first, my Lord, the Committee have taken an exaggerated view of the delays involved by commitment proceedings and the double examination of witnesses, and also of the increased chance of witnesses being intimidated. I submit few witnesses who come forward to speak against an accused person on oath before the Court, are likely to go back upon what they have said by reason of intimidation, because there is also the fear of the law which will inflict punishment upon them if they did. Secondly, if they are such timid people that they are so much liable to the influence of fear, we should not forget that they may also not unlikely be liable to other influences, influences of intimidation or force which might have led them to make untrue statements in the first instance. The one apprehension has to be pitted against the other. It has at any rate to be borne in mind. As to the second point that it will add to the hardships involved in their attendance, with the consequence of making them less ready to come forward, I could never imagine that such an argument would be urged on behalf of Government. If witnesses would be less ready to come forward to give evidence because of the hardships involved in their attendance, where a man is charged with a heinous offence, the law can compel their attendance. The provisions of law are strong enough and ample enough to compel their attendance. Lastly, the Committee said that delay would also afford time for them to forget the facts. On the contrary, I think that when they have once made statements on oath, that would help them to fix the facts in their memory rather than lead them to forget them. I submit, therefore, that the reasons advanced are very meagre, and afford very slender support to the proposal to do away with commitment proceedings ; and I submit that a case has not been made out for providing for a still more speedy trial of serious offences than is already provided for by the existing Act. The provision relating to the examination of the accused on oath is no doubt a new provision. I will not deal with this point further now, but will do so at a later stage. I will only submit that there is nothing to justify the enactment of a provision similar to the one that already exists in Act XIV of 1908. For these reasons I support the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel. There is only one other point which I should touch upon. In replying to the proposal of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to define 'revolutionary' movements, my official friends argued as if it were a sin to receive light if it did not come to them before a particular moment. I venture to differ from them. We are all human beings, including my friends on the official benches ; and it will be within their experience that a certain amount of light is flashed on the question after the first discussion. I do not think they would seriously shut their eyes against any illumination, and refuse to accept the light it brings, if it should not have happened to come to them at a particular juncture. It is possible that the provisions of Act XIV of 1908 were not as fully examined as they might have been when Part I of the Bill before us was drafted. It is possible that the discussion that has now taken place has thrown some light on the points, which may well induce even the Government as at present constituted, to reconsider its position. I hope the Hon'ble the Home Member will bring a judicial mind to bear upon the situation as it stands, and that he will not be obstinate in refusing to accept this suggestion merely because it comes at a late stage."

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur Mr. B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I did not intend to intervene in the course of the debate, but there is one point that strikes me and I should like to allude to it. There is no repeal of the Schedule. Section 42 of the Bill says ' All powers given by this Act shall be in addition to, and not in derogation of, any other powers conferred by or under any enactment '. That is to say that the Government can in any particular case choose the procedure laid down under the Act of 1908 or resort to the provisions of the new Bill. They may lay the particular case before the Magistrate and then follow the procedure under the Act of 1908, or they may proceed to the High Court under this Bill. My submission is that there must be some certainty on the subject as to the procedure that is likely to be followed in this particular class of cases. Powers should not be conferred on the executive leading to the engendering of suspicion in the minds of the people. The procedure may be A in the case of one individual and B in the case of another. Most of the offences mentioned in the Schedule of the Act of 1908 are the offences mentioned in this Schedule with the exception of 124A, 148, 153A, the sections under the Arms Act, etc., and a few others. In respect of the offences common to both there should be a repeal of those in Act XIV of 1908. The procedure should be certain so that no option may be left to the Government to choose which procedure should be followed in a particular case, or Act No. XIV should be modified and amplified in a way to suit the new condition of things. I think that Part I may be deleted or Act XIV may be usefully modified to suit the altered conditions."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I did not intend to speak on this motion and in that respect, I am in much the same position as the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, but it appears to me that one of the points raised in the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel is such that I should take the earliest opportunity of replying to it. The gravamen of his allegation as I understand it is ' you have got this Act XIV of 1908, why therefore should you want a new Act for the trial of offences ? ' My Lord, the answer is very simple. The procedure under the Bill is entirely different from the procedure prescribed by the Act of 1908. There is no provision in the Act of 1908 for a trial at or near the scene of occurrence. Again the Act of 1908 contemplated a commitment procedure which might be ex-parte. There was, however, a kind of commitment procedure; that is one of the defects that the Rowlett Committee deprecated as tending to delay the course of justice. Secondly, the evidence which may be adduced in trials under this Bill is different from the evidence which may be adduced in trials under the Act

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—" May I correct the Hon'ble Member. Section 4 of the Act says, 'The accused shall not be present during an inquiry under section 3, sub-section (1), unless the Magistrate so directs'. So it is open to a Magistrate to direct that the accused may be present at the inquiry."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" That accentuates my point that there is a difference in the procedure under this Bill and the Act of 1908, for there is no previous magisterial inquiry necessary under the Bill. Returning to the question of evidence, the evidence which may be adduced under Part I is materially different from that which may be adduced under the Act of 1908. Hon'ble Members will observe that under Part I of the Bill provision has been made for the examination of the accused as a witness. That is a matter which was not provided for also in the Act of 1908. Finally, the offences for which persons may be tried under Part I of the Bill differ from the offences for which they were to be tried under the Act of 1908. The Act of 1908 is, however, in some respects wider. The provisions of the present Bill can be brought into operation only under specified circumstances which have been recited at considerable length to the Council already. The existence of any such special circumstances is not a condition precedent to the institution of proceedings under the Act of 1908. I have now explained what the differences in the new enactment are. We are not as ignorant as the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya supposes of this Act of 1908, nor were the Committee; their attention must have been drawn to that Act, for they make a distinct reference to it. The fact is that it was found by experience in Bengal that the provisions of the Act of 1908 were not effective, and it is for that reason that the present procedure has been suggested. I do not intend to deal at length with the other points raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya. He says that witnesses are not likely to be intimidated, that there is nothing in the causing of inconvenience to witnesses by making them attend frequent trials, that these are not points to which this Council ought to pay any consideration, that the speedy administration of justice is also not a matter of great importance. My Lord, we know that witnesses—honest witnesses—are intimidated. We also think that it is desirable that witnesses should not be interfered with more than is necessary in assisting Government. We have not found that people in the class of life from which witnesses come are usually ready to come forward and give evidence. If the whole of their business is dislocated by constant attendance and frequent delays, then it becomes impossible to get them to give evidence in these matters.

" Finally as to expeditious trial; there was a suggestion made, I do not suppose the Hon'ble Member meant it really, but I ought to repudiate it. It was suggested that in our desire to secure a speedy trial, we were neglecting the obvious necessity for a fair, impartial and careful trial. My Lord, I submit that this Council cannot find anything in the Bill to support this argument. Who can say that a Court consisting of three High Court Judges is likely either to be incompetent to perform its duties properly or not to use its best endeavours in performing them impartially? The fact is that we have found the Act of 1908 ineffective, and for that reason we seek to supplement it by an Act prescribing a short and speedy but careful and impartial trial before the strongest court possible. There is a great point in what the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma said, and that is the existence of these two Acts side by side. Well, my Lord, if this Act had been permanent, it probably would have been desirable to repeal the

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

Act of 1908, and we shall even now have to consider that question further, and I am much obliged to Mr. Sarma for drawing my attention to the matter, but I must say I think that the position has been considerably altered by the fact that the present Bill will only be temporary in duration."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, it has been suggested 1 P.M. by the Hon'ble the Home Member that the provisions of Act XIV of 1908 have been found to be ineffective. I wish he had quoted instances of delays having taken place owing to the commitment proceedings provided for in the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1908. This Council, before it comes to any conclusion on the desirability of passing this particular Part, must know, is entitled to know, how many cases were tried under that particular Act, and in how many of them such delays took place. Without any definite statement regarding the question before this Council, I respectfully submit the Council is not in a position to judge whether the provisions of the Act have been really found to be ineffective. On the contrary, so far as I can judge, I find that most of the cases after 1908 were, instead of being sent to a special bench, sent to the Court of Sessions and the accused had

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" May I explain, my Lord? The reason for that is, we found the special bench ineffective, the procedure was not suitable."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" So the procedure under the 1 P.M.
Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, according to the statement of the Hon'ble the Home Member was found worse than the ordinary procedure in ordinary courts of law, where you have the full commitment proceedings, the Sessions Court trial with a jury and the appeal proceedings in the High Court. According to the Hon'ble the Home Member's statement, the Act worked more for the benefit of the accused than the existing provisions of the Act. I confess I cannot understand that position at all. So far as the Rowlatt Committee's Report is concerned, they have nowhere in their Report said so. Is it really a fact the procedure under that Act was found to be worse than the ordinary procedure laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code and the Evidence Act? Without any instances to show that the delays that had taken place were so great and so serious that it has been found necessary to supplement the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act by this particular Chapter, we must pause.

"Then again it has been suggested that the commitment proceedings involve an amount of delay. I admit that. Such delay is, according to the Rowlatt Committee's Report due to double examination of witnesses. As I say, the Rowlatt Committee has committed some error there. There is no double examination unless the Magistrate chooses to allow the accused to be examined, as the proceedings are to be ex-parte. It is only a question of a day. The Magistrate examines witnesses and sends the accused directly to the High Court. There is no question of any delay. There is no question of a double examination of witnesses, there is only examination-in-chief in the committing Magistrate's court. The cross-examination takes place in the High Court, and I do not see how that would materially delay the proceedings.

"Then, again, it has been suggested that the number of scheduled offences differs from the number given in the Schedule to the proposed Bill. Well, I have carefully examined the proposed Schedule and compared it with the Schedule to the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act. What do we find? The two sections that are proposed to be added now are Sections 124A and 153A. These are the only two additional sections in the present Schedule. Well, my Lord, if the intention of Government was to bring the trials under these two sections also under the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, the better course for them would have been to bring out openly and straightforwardly an amending Bill asking this Council to consent to the insertion of sections 124A and 153A in the Schedule to the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act. There would have been no difficulty.

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

"Then again another point that has been made is that the rules of evidence are different in this Bill from the rules that are laid down in the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act. I submit, my Lord, that here the Hon'ble the Home Member is wrong. In the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act also almost similar rules of evidence have been enacted. It has been provided there that the statement of a witness before a Magistrate is admissible in evidence at the trial if it is proved that the witness is dead or incapacitated on further proof that such death or incapacity has been caused in the interest of the accused. The special rules here also lay down the same thing. I invite the attention of the Council to clause 18 of this Bill which says that—

'Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, where—

- (a) the statement of any person has been recorded by any Magistrate, and such statement has been read over and explained to the person making it and has been signed by him, or
- (b) the statement of any person has been recorded by the Court, but such person has not been cross-examined, such statement may be admitted in evidence by the Court if the person making the same is dead or cannot be found or is incapable of giving evidence, and it is established to the satisfaction of the Court that such death, disappearance or incapacity has been caused in the interests of the accused'.

So special rules of evidence under the Bill are similar to the rules of evidence under the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act. I, therefore, submit that unless it is proved to the satisfaction of this Council that the provisions of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act have failed in bringing about a speedy trial in anarchical and revolutionary crimes, this Council is not justified in accepting this Part of the Bill. With these few words I hope the Council will see its way to delete this Part.

The motion was put and negatived.

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch till a quarter past two.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 3, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill."

2-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, the amendment which I wish to move to clause 3 is as follows:—that for the words 'in Council' the words 'in Legislative Council' be substituted. In other words the word 'Legislative' be introduced between the words 'in' and 'Council'. Looked at from that point of view, it is one of the shortest amendments. The reason for this is that in the affairs of men it is not enough always to be in the right. In most cases in private life one decides rightly and is quite happy about it, but in matters where others are concerned, it is not enough to be in the right, one must also appear to be in the right, and this necessity for appearing to be in the right is at the bottom of all the formalities of law and the procedure of allowing a man to have the best counsel he can get, and so on. These formalities at one time were carried much further than they are now. In the Riot Acts in England one reads that before an order to fire could be given the Magistrate had to read out the whole Act, and from that we have the phrase that, when a person becomes angry, they used to say that he read the Riot Act. That is to say there was a formality before giving the order to fire in the case of a flagrant breach of the peace. These formalities are sought now to be removed, at least in the case of particular offences dealt with by this particular Bill, but I believe that although these formalities may be curtailed or done away with, still the necessity for being in the right and appearing to be in the right remains, and for that purpose some formality, not very lengthy, not one imposing a great delay, but yet a formality, so as to assure the people that an endeavour is being made to do justice in the case and go about it in a cautious way, is necessary. So we have got to have some formality and in order to have it I have introduced the word 'Legislative' between 'in' and 'Council.' That is to say, before the Governor General in Council proclaims a particular area and applies this Part of the Bill to it, he has got to take the Legislative Council into his confidence. It really is a matter of taking into confidence because a simple Resolution may be introduced that this Bill be applied to a particular area and that resolution will be easily passed. It may give an opportunity to the Hon'ble the Home Member to explain why Government is taking this action, and probably it may lead to a debate, but a short debate, and that will be enough to assure everybody that steps are being taken with great caution and care. This formality to me appears very necessary to inspire confidence among the people.

"There is a further reason for this and that is one which did not occur to me this morning, but was made apparent to me to-day. The Council will probably remember that an attempt was made to define the word 'revolutionary' this morning, and we saw the opposition it met with and also the support it received. When there is a word in the law which has got several meanings, and those meanings insensibly shade from one to the other, one way of confining that particular word to a particular meaning is to define it in the law itself. And as it is urged that that word will have to be used and acted upon, not by a Court, but by the Executive Government, I think we should like to define the meaning of that word. When the Court decides a matter both parties are present with their Counsel and the matter is argued out, so there is very little danger, at least the danger is very much minimised, whereas when action is taken by the Executive, when parties are not present, it is different. It may be that the reports are very good and reliable; it may be that they are exaggerated; it may be that they are wrong, and the executive officers have got to make up their minds on these reports and follow a particular line of action. So that, I think, even in the interests of the executive officers themselves, they would like to see the word carefully defined and made precise so as to be easily acted upon. I think this Council will agree that before any action is taken, it is just as well that the circumstances which have involved the exercise of these powers should be explained and understood and talked about so that the world will know what is going on, and why a particular Act has been made necessary, and why it is being put into force. Giving publicity to it at this stage appears to me very necessary, and so I say that, before proclaiming a district or area, the Governor General in Council should make up his mind and pass a Resolution in the Legislative Council and then proceed to apply it. There is a further reason still. It may be said that the Council may not be sitting at the time or it would involve delay. If the Council happens to be sitting, there would be no delay, because the matter could be introduced as an urgent matter, and your Excellency could suspend the Rules of Business and the thing could be done at once. If the Council does not happen to be sitting and the matter is really so important that exceptional measures should be taken, then the Council could be easily summoned. At any rate we could do as they do in England when Parliament is not sitting and cannot be easily summoned, then the matter is brought before Parliament, seven days I believe was the time allowed by the Act of Parliament, and the matter was placed on the table as the phrase goes. So I think that something similar might be done here. But I should like that it should be that the Governor General in Legislative Council is satisfied, not alone in the Executive Council, where beyond reports and probably some information, they have not access to the general population and any way of finding out what really is going on and knowing it first hand, as we call it in law. They may have heard about it, and yet, not having that personal knowledge of the matter, they may not feel quite certain about it. So they may share the responsibility of that action with the Council, and that is my object in putting forward this amendment.

"With these words, I submit the amendment for the acceptance of the Council."

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; Sir William Vincent.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" May it please your Excellency, I have got a somewhat similar amendment and I should therefore like to accord my hearty support to the amendment of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde. He has placed the case so clearly and so lucidly before the Council that it is unnecessary for me to add any new arguments. The amendment merely says well, if you are satisfied that there is a case for a Notification, satisfy us also, and then issue it. It asks for nothing more. When you want to issue a Notification, you kindly come and place all the reports that you have got before us and let us also be satisfied. We would also like to take part in it. And, after all, you don't lose much by it. You have got a majority and you will always, even if we be unwilling to consent to the issue of a Notification, be able to issue it just as you pass this Act against our wishes."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, this, and a number of later amendments to this Bill, raise questions which are to my mind of considerable constitutional importance, and if I deal with them now, I do not propose to speak on the matter at any length again.

" I regard this amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde as a not unnatural attempt to control the executive by direct order of the Legislature. But it is nevertheless a departure from constitutional practice. Even if we take the case of the United Kingdom, Parliament does not interfere at all with details of administration, nor does it undertake the business of administration. And the reason for this is, I think, not far to seek. A deliberative body cannot really adequately deal with such matters. An assembly of the nature of this Council is really concerned with questions of policy and principle rather than with the application of the policy, and the responsibility for the application must remain with the Executive Government. The device of using the Legislature to control the application of an Act is, if I may say so, clumsy. The Members of this Council must be lacking in knowledge of the requirements as compared with the Executive Government. There are many papers which cannot be put before all members, and indeed there is much information which, I think, all the Hon'ble Members of this Council would not trouble to read. Further, the consumption of time and labour in placing these matters before Council is really disproportionate to any benefit. The responsibility for the application of these Acts must rest with the Executive Government, and no attempt of this kind on the part of the Legislature to usurp powers which do not really appertain to the Legislature could be accepted.

" Well, my Lord, if this is true of Parliament, and I believe it to be in accordance with constitutional practice, how much more so is it true of this Council, the powers of which are very strictly limited by the Statute? Section 67 of the Government of India Act, 1915, describes definitely what the powers of the Legislative Council are. 'At a meeting of the Indian Legislative Council', it says, 'no motion shall be introduced other than a motion for leave to introduce a measure for the purpose of enactment, etc., etc.' Then it goes on to say: 'Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing provisions of this section, the Governor General in Council may, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, make rules authorising at any meeting of the Indian Legislative Council the discussion of matters of general public interest, and of the Budget', and so forth. Well, the intention of the Statute and the rules framed thereunder is that this body in matters executive and administrative should only act as an advisory body to the Governor General in Executive Council, and it is for that reason that Resolutions of this Council are only recommendatory in character and not mandatory. The real controlling authority over the Government of India is Parliament and the Secretary of State, and it is to them that the Government of India are responsible for the application of the law and, generally, for all administrative acts. And I submit to the Council that it would be subversive of the whole constitutional practice if this amendment and these other amendments which likewise give this Council a power of direct interference with the administration were passed.

" I think the Hon'ble Member referred to the Irish Act in his speech. Was that the Act that he mentioned? I am not quite sure if that is so."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" Yes."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" There even there is no provision for the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland taking the previous sanction of Parliament before applying the Crimes Act. The law provides that if he applies the Act and, if the Parliament is at the time sitting, he is to lay a Proclamation before Parliament. If the Parliament is not sitting at the time, then the Proclamation has to be laid before Parliament within fourteen days of the opening of the next Session, but there is no question of the previous sanction of Parliament. So far I have dealt with what I conceive to be the constitutional objections to the procedure which the Hon'ble Member advocates.

" The practical objections are, as I think Members of this Council will admit, equally cogent : the necessity for bringing this Act into operation may be urgent and may occur, if it occurred at all, as likely as not when the Council was not sitting. The Council at present meets at long intervals, and it seems unreasonable that the Government should be deterred from bringing into operation any portion of this Act merely by reason of the fact that the Council is not sitting. " Of course I may be told that the Government could on each occasion summon an emergency meeting for the purpose of considering this question but, I submit, that that would impose an unreasonable restriction on the Executive Government ; it would also involve delay if on every occasion on which this Act is to be applied to the smallest area, we had to have a meeting of Council, and probably find a month later that we had to re-summon the Council, in connection with another area. I hope that Hon'ble Members will see that this is unreasonable. It is always open to them, if this Council thinks that the Act has been unreasonably applied, to bring in a Resolution in this Council, recommending the Governor General to withdraw the notification which he has issued, but I ask the Council to agree with me that both on constitutional grounds and for practical reasons the present amendment cannot be accepted."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" I agree with one part of the speech of the Hon'ble the Home Member, and it is that they do not impose in Ireland, or even in England for the matter of that, previous sanction ; but they provide for the sanction being taken as early as possible. At any rate they provide an opportunity, I believe, for the matter being discussed, and they provide this opportunity by laying a Proclamation in the House of Commons and by sending it to the Clerk of the Crown. I submit that my object is the same, which is to secure a discussion of the matter. A discussion before the issue of the Proclamation is probably better than discussing it after the thing is done, because once the Government is committed to a particular line of action, it is difficult even for the Government to withdraw from that position. It is also difficult for us to bring in a Resolution, as was suggested by the Hon'ble the Home Member. It appears easy to move a Resolution, but the materials for moving that Resolution generally are not available. They are available only to Government officers or to Hon'ble Members in office ; but to us they are not available. So this post facto remedy of moving a Resolution appears to be difficult and inadequate, and that is why I wish to provide for it in this way in this particular amendment ; though in a subsequent part I try to avail myself of this remedy of asking the Executive to lay the Proclamation on the table of this Legislative Council. That was my object in moving this amendment at this stage, and that is all I have to say."

The motion was put and negatived.

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—" My Lord, I formally move that in clause 3 after the words ' he may ' the words ' with the previous approval of the Indian Legislative Council ' be inserted. The matter has been sufficiently discussed, and I do not wish to take up the time of the Council. I merely formally move the amendment."

The motion was put and negatived.

2-38 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Your Excellency, I beg to move that to clause 3 the following provisos be added :—

' Provided that no action shall be taken by the Governor General in Council, without giving the Indian Legislative Council or the Legislative Council of the province in respect of which such a notification is proposed to be made, an opportunity of expressing its opinion by a Resolution passed on the subject :

Provided further that such notification shall at any time after the expiry of one year from the date thereof be withdrawn on the recommendation of the Indian Legislative Council or the Legislative Council of the province in respect of which it may have been made by a Resolution passed by three-fifths of the members of either of the said Councils.'

" These are really two amendments which have been embodied in this amendment of mine for the sake of conciseness and brevity and inasmuch as both pertain to clause 3.

" The several objections which the Hon'ble the Home Member has suggested against the acceptance of the amendment of my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde and the amendment of my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Patel do not apply to my amendments. I shall deal with the constitutional aspect of them later. The first part of this amendment asks for the acceptance and enforcement of the principle that no man shall be judged unless he is heard. It is proposed by clause 3, and the subsequent clauses having a similar object, that the Governor General in Council should have the power to proclaim to the world that the whole of India or that the whole of a province or a part of a province is in a disturbed state, that anarchy prevails there and revolutionary movements are rife. The honour, the prestige and the good name, therefore, either of India or of a particular province or of a particular district, are vitally involved in this Proclamation. I ask that before the Governor General in Council takes such a very important step which may lead to the casting of a slur on the loyalty of a portion of His Majesty's subjects, an opportunity should be given to the representatives of the people to show that they do not deserve the condemnation which is proposed to be passed on them. Mark you, I do not ask that the recommendation of the Legislative Council should be binding upon the Executive Government at this stage. I only ask that an opportunity should be given for the people to be heard. I could not formulate any other channel than the Legislative Council for the expression of the people's opinion. I, therefore, think that on that ground this amendment can be very strongly supported unless there are practical objections or constitutional objections of so great a character that the principle can or should be sacrificed to the exigencies of the case. Now, one objection that may be taken is that it may not be possible, and that is the strongest objection possibly, and the one that has been urged by the Hon'ble the Home Member, that it may not be possible to place all the confidential papers relating to the subject before the Legislative Council, and consequently any Resolution that may be brought in may not be of that practical value as such a Resolution might otherwise be. My Lord, I would submit that the same question will have to be faced sooner or later—sooner rather than later ; and that no very great object can be gained by the postponement of the discussion which will inevitably follow unless the Resolution is vetoed—no object can be gained, I say, by the postponement of the discussion of such a subject. Supposing the notification is made, at the earliest possible opportunity, the question will be brought up for discussion ; such papers as could be disclosed to the Council would have to be disclosed, and the Government would have to state their case. Would it not be better that that case, so far as it can be formulated, should be placed before the Council with a caution, possibly, by the Member in charge, that there is much more which might be said but which sound policy dictates that it be not disclosed, and therefore that the Council should not take it for granted that those are all the materials upon which the Government has acted or is going to act? I would submit that the reasons in favour of such a course are these. The section says that two things are necessary. Firstly, if in the whole or any part of British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted. That is one thing; and secondly that scheduled offences in connection with such movements are prevalent to a particular extent, that is number two. It may be first of all that the statement of fact that anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted may be questioned. Of course without disclosing any very great details it will be perfectly possible for the Government Member to state the reasons for the existence of the belief on the part of the Government that such movements are being promoted. Members of Council and the outside public would be in a position to know what exactly is meant by the revolutionary movements which are likely to give trouble or are giving trouble. Therefore, there can be no difficulty so far as that aspect of the question is concerned. Then it may be the fact also that scheduled offences are prevalent in that area or in the whole of India; it may be that dacoity is very greatly prevalent, that mischief is being resorted to, that murders are numerous and growing year by year in numbers; these may be facts and it would be possible for Members of the Legislative Council who are acquainted with the particular districts or of the whole of a province to come forward to show that, although it may be a fact that those offences are largely on the increase or largely prevalent, still those crimes have absolutely no connection whatsoever with any revolutionary movement or anarchical movement in that or any other part of India. I lay some stress upon this, your Excellency, because the causal connection between the two is likely to be invoked in a large measure and without a due analysis especially where the executive officer can easily explain the prevalence of a particular crime. A police officer or police superintendent may for the matter of that honestly believe that offences within a particular area which he cannot detect or which he cannot take for conviction can be explained only on the hypothesis that they are connected with the revolutionary movement. A man may be preaching politics in a particular area which may also happen to be a place where offences of a particular character were rife. Nothing would be easier than to connect the two, and it is just possible that the Government when it analyses and finds that A, B and C have preached certain doctrines in a particular area and also the coincidence of certain offences in that particular area, may legitimately agree without anything else being said to the contrary that the two are connected in the way that is suggested by their officers, for after all officers must be the judges on the spot, whereas a little discussion in the Council following a statement of fact may help to clear the situation and give materials to the Government of India and the Local Governments also to pause and see as to whether there is any real causal connection between the two, or whether the increase of crime or the non-detection of crime are due to adventitious causes.

“ Coming to the constitutional aspect of the question there is nothing in this part of my amendment which conflicts whatsoever with the supremacy of the executive in matters of administration. All that I ask for is, that an opportunity which sooner or later would be taken should be given before such an announcement is made.

“ Then I come to the second part of my amendment. The second part of the amendment is that after an order or notification is in force for one year, then if the Legislative Council should by a Resolution passed by a three-fifth majority recommend that that notification should be withdrawn, the Executive Government should be asked to do so. Now, there may be an apparent contradiction, the constitutional theory to which the Hon'ble Member referred in this part; but I submit that there is not. I take it that even after the reformed Councils sit the administration of the branches of law and order and justice would still be with the Executive Government as is proposed to be under the tentative reform proposals. It is at present so. But what I say is that it is not the normal administration of justice that would be interfered with by the Legislative Council by means of a Resolution, but that we in empowering the Executive Government with extraordinary powers suited only to specific occasions depriving the people of their liberties under certain conditions, that we the Legislative Council subject those powers which are conferred upon the executive in particular ways, that is, the powers are subject to those limitations; therefore, there is no question of the Legislative Council interfering with the administration of the powers which are conferred by the Legislative Council upon the Executive. What we say is in giving the powers we subject those powers to those limitations. I do not see in any way whatsoever any conflict, if the grant of these exceptional powers is within the competence of this Legislature in executive action being controlled in particular cases especially of this drastic character. I, therefore, accepting the theory of the Executive Government's powers, see nothing whatsoever in my amendment which conflicts with the enforcement of that theory in the present or the future. Then I do not say that an ordinary majority would do. I put it that an extraordinary majority of $\frac{2}{3}$ that would amount to $\frac{3}{4}$ of the non-official Members of the Council, because we take it that even if the Councils are enlarged there would be still an official element, therefore it would be $\frac{3}{4}$ of the non-official element in the Council, should agree to a particular Resolution before they recommend it for adoption or before it is binding upon the Executive Council. You may ask 'Why should not the Council ask for a repeal of the Act at the time?' I have my own grounds for not saying it. I accept it now that the Legislative Council are going to keep the Act in force for "three years only. I only want the notification to be withdrawn in a particular case or particular cases under special circumstances which would be brought to prominent notice by the Legislative Council in the course of their discussions; but the Government would still have the power after withdrawing that notification to issue another notification should circumstances require it. Therefore this does not prevent the Government from giving the people an opportunity of restating their case under altered conditions; I do not mean to say under the same conditions, under altered conditions coming to the Council. I think, my Lord, there must be some reality in the exercise of the control of the Legislative Council over the powers which have been given to the Executive Government in this drastic fashion, and I think there is absolutely nothing wrong in the suggestion that I have made. It may be said that I have given an alternative power to the Imperial Legislative Council and to the Provincial Legislative Councils. My object was this: the Government of the provinces is naturally, I suppose, at present under the control of the Government of India and will, I take it, be also after this Bill is passed under the control of the Government of India. Therefore it is in conformity with the constitution of the country that the Legislative Council here should have power to interfere in a case when it thinks fit to do so; but ordinarily it would not unless the whole of India is to be included in the notification, thereby sully the fair name of India. The whole of India is to be included in the notification and if it is only a part of the province the question would legitimately arise in the first instance in that Council. The amendment is worded elastically with the object of conforming to the traditions and constitution of the Provincial Governments and the Government of India and the Imperial Legislative Council, and at the same time to give an opportunity to Provincial Councils to express their views and opinions on matters that particularly appertain to them. If there should be any technical difficulty in the wording that is a matter that can be set right, but it is the principle underlying that I hope will be accepted."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I must oppose this amendment for exactly the same reasons that I gave in the previous case. The main difference in this amendment is that the Hon'ble Member proposes that the action of the Governor General in Council should be controlled by the Provincial Legislative Council as well as by the Indian Legislative Council. I do not think that this suggestion will commend itself to many Members here.

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir William Vincent ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ;
Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The second part of his amendment really gives mandatory effect to a Resolution of this Council which is exactly contrary to the spirit of the rules and of the Statute. I may add also that the delay in issuing the notification which the procedure described by the Hon'ble Member would entail would be a serious obstacle to public business. Finally, I should like to repeat that where responsibility is there power must be. The responsibility for maintaining law and order in this country is with the Governor General in Council and they are responsible to His Majesty's Government. If they have that responsibility, they must have the power to enforce it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I have nothing more to say."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 3, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 4 stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—I beg to move the following amendment that in clause 4 (1) after the words 'it may' the words 'after hearing the person concerned' be inserted. The clause will then read :—'Where the Local Government is of opinion that the trial of any person accused of a scheduled offence should be held in accordance with the provisions of this Part, it may, after hearing the person concerned, order any officer of Government to prefer a written information to the Chief Justice against such person.' The Council has just disposed of two amendments seeking to provide that the notification under clause 3 should be issued with the previous approval of the Legislative Council. It has also disposed of another amendment of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma that before the issue of a notification an opportunity should be given to the representatives of the people to express their views. These two amendments having been disposed of, the Local Government as the clause stands on being satisfied that the trial of any particular person should be held in accordance with the provision of this Part will have the power to order any officer of Government to prefer a written information to the Chief Justice against that person. All I ask is that, when the Local Government on information from the police or otherwise is of opinion that a trial of any person should be held under this Part, that person should be given an opportunity of stating why no information should be laid against him. An opportunity of having his say in the matter should be given to him. I trust that this proposal will not be objected to by the Hon'ble the Home Member."

3-5 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I should have been glad if I could have accepted this amendment, but I am afraid I cannot. It was only a few minutes ago that the Hon'ble Member cited, with approval as I understood him, the Act of 1908. May I point out to him that under that Act there is no right such as is now suggested? The reasons which actuate the Government in this matter are that the trial will be held before three High Court Judges only if, in the opinion of the Government, that order is necessary in the public interest and for the preservation of law and order. It is not as if the accused was going before any incompetent tribunal or any tribunal that is not likely to do him ample justice. I have not heard any complaints against the tribunals set up under the Act of 1908, and in this case the Judges will be of the same class. Another point is that one of the objects, in fact the main object of this Part of the Bill, is to provide for an expeditious trial of persons, and such expedition is defeated by preliminary proceedings of this kind. Directly you have a preliminary hearing you have the appearance of counsel, pleaders, affidavits, etc. Further, it would be very difficult to decide what particular officer should hear on behalf of the Local Government an application of this character. If there was any question of prejudicing the accused by an order under this Part there might be something to be said for the amendment, but actually the accused will go before a stronger tribunal than is ordinarily the case. I must, therefore, oppose the amendment."

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I have only one word to say on this point. It is said that the proceedings would be lengthened because of the appearance of a pleader. As to that I would only say this that there is no provision for a pleader to appear as of right. I do not ask for such a right. The pleader would appear in cases where he is permitted to appear by the Local Government. My point is this, why are these provisions necessary? When there is ample provision why come here and ask for further legislation?"

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I move that in clause 4 (2) after the words 'any person' the words 'whose case is under inquiry before a Magistrate or' be inserted.

The amended clause will run thus:—

'No order under sub-section (1) shall be made in respect of, or be deemed to include, any person whose case is under inquiry before a Magistrate or who has been committed under the Code for trial before a High Court, or a Court of Session,' etc., etc.

"What I want, your Excellency, is this, that the cases which have already been sent up by the police to a Magistrate for inquiry should not be touched by the notification. I shall give one illustration. Supposing two cases of some scheduled offences are pending before a Magistrate and simultaneous inquiry is being proceeded with in both. Suppose they are finished on one and the same day and the Magistrate writes his order of committal in one case and has not been able to finish his order of committal in the other, say the notification is issued on the next day. It means that the man against whom the order of committal is already passed will have a differential treatment under the clause as it stands. Difficulties of this kind will arise, and two persons similarly situated, will be differently treated. When the case is already before a Magistrate there is no justification why the Magistrate should be deprived of his jurisdiction and the case should be taken away from him and tried under the provisions of this Part. I, therefore, respectfully submit that cases which have already been sent to the Magistrate before the issue of a notification should not be dealt with under the provisions of this Part."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, I have an amendment on the same point, and though it is not exactly in the same words, at any rate the object is the same. My amendment is that in clause 4 (2) after the words 'Court of Session' the words 'or has been placed before a Magistrate' be inserted. It comes to the same thing, though my reason is different from what my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel has urged. My reason is that when a Court is seized of a case where a case is put before a Magistrate, it can only be removed from his cognisance by the order of a superior Court, that is to say, the High Court can transfer it, but it has got to go to a Magistrate again. The principle, of the law, as I understand it, is that once the case is before a Magistrate, another Magistrate of equal power may have to try it, generally it does not go to a Magistrate of inferior power, it can only be taken away from him by an order of the High Court. In legal language I suppose it is said that when a Court is seized of a case and when a Magistrate has taken cognisance of a case, nobody can interfere with it except a judicial authority. In this connection even if a case is before a Magistrate, this section appears to empower the Local Government to take that case away from him and make it over to the Special Tribunal. This, I think, infringes the principle of which I was speaking, namely, that once a case is before a Magistrate nobody can interfere with it except a higher judicial authority and it goes to nobody except to judicial officers.

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Mr. C. A. Kincaid.]

" Another argument in favour of the amendment is that once a matter has gone to the Courts it is not desirable to take it away and put it under executive jurisdiction. The tendency of modern legislation is not to combine the powers of the executive and the judiciary in one and the same person. And there is the inconvenience pointed out by Mr. Patel in the case of a person having two cases against him. One case has been committed, and before the other case has been committed, this order of the Local Government arrives. Then what is to be the result? They have to arrange it somehow or other. To avoid cases of this kind and difficulties which may arise in the administration of the law, I propose that once a case has been put before the Magistrate and has gone to the ordinary judiciary, it should not be brought under the provisions of this section. This is what I have to say in support of my amendment, and I speak now so that I need not make any speech later and my amendment may be put along with Mr. Patel's amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid :—" My Lord, I do not want to take up the time of the Council for more than two or three minutes, but in the course of these two or three minutes I shall try and show that there are one or two good reasons, at least what appear to me to be good reasons, for rejecting these two amendments and keeping the Bill as it stands. Now the underlying facts of this amendment are these : Under clause 4, section 1, of the Bill under certain circumstances the Local Government can lay information to the Chief Justice. By clause 5 of the Bill the Chief Justice then constitutes a bench of three High Court Judges to try the case. Section 4, clause 2, however, lays down that where a case has already been committed to a Sessions Court or to a High Court, no information shall be laid about it by the Local Government to the Chief Justice. Now the first point I will put before the Council is that there is a precedent for that. In section 2 of Act XIV of 1908 you have almost an exactly similar wording. Sessions cases committed to the High Court and the Sessions Court are referred to, but cases that come before the Magistrate are left out. When I was in Bombay many years ago attached to the Legal Remembrancer's Office it was the rule of that office that if you had a good precedent you ought to stick to it, and I think the Hon'ble Mr. Moncrieff Smith will agree with me that it is a good rule. If you have a single clause or section it is always risky to add to it, as the addition may become a pitfall or a snare. The fact, therefore, that there is the precedent of Act XIV of 1908 is a very good reason for following it.

The second point is this : Under clause 8 of the Bill it is laid down that the procedure prescribed for the trial of cases by this special bench is the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates. Now every lawyer in this Council knows that there is a good deal of difference between the procedure laid down for the trial of Sessions cases and that prescribed for the trial of warrant cases. Therefore, if you should take a Sessions case, already begun, from a Sessions Court or a High Court and give it to the special bench to try, you would not only have a change of Court but a change of procedure. That would be an anomaly and might be to the prejudice of the accused and his advisers. But where a case has come before a Magistrate and has been transferred to the special bench, the Magistrate and the special bench both being bound by the rules of procedure, namely, those prescribed for warrant cases, there would not be that anomaly.

" My third point is this : Under section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code, where a Magistrate takes over a part-heard case (a case in which his predecessor has heard some evidence), he need not hear all the witnesses de novo, but can convict the accused partly upon such evidence as he himself hears and partly upon the evidence taken down by his predecessor. Now as I read this Bill in conjunction with the Criminal Procedure Code, it seems to me, of course it is a point on which there is some doubt, but it seems to me, that when a case has been transferred from a Magistrate to a special bench, the special bench being bound by the rules of procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases, would be empowered to take advantage of section 350. Therefore they would be able to save all the labour and all the time involved in taking evidence twice over. There is no corresponding section where a Sessions case is transferred; therefore if a Sessions case were transferred to a special bench, it seems to me that the special bench would have to go over all the witnesses over again and that there would be a great waste of time and energy.

"I will now shortly refer to the possibility which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel mentioned, namely, where two cases have been tried simultaneously by a Magistrate and the order of committal has been passed in one case, but had not been passed in the other, and where in the short interval between the evening of one day and the morning of another day the Governor General in Council has introduced Part I into the district. Well, my Lord, it is not only in Sessions cases that the one is taken and the other is left, and I do not think there would be any very great harm if this somewhat improbable incident occurred. I do not very well see how the learned Magistrate could be trying two cases simultaneously, and it seems almost incredible to suppose that, in the interval between one evening and the next morning, the Governor General would satisfy himself of the existence of a revolutionary movement and the occurrence of scheduled offences requiring speedy trial. I do not think that is a case likely to arise. In any case if it did arise what would happen? Nothing very grievous; in one case the accused person would be tried in the ordinary way and in the other case by a bench of three Judges of the High Court of Bombay or Calcutta, as the case may be.

"Now my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde has laid down two principles. One is that only a judicial officer should transfer. Well, as a matter of fact, the District Magistrate is in a sense a Magisterial officer, but he is also the executive head of the district and he constantly transfers cases from one sub-divisional Magistrate to another. Mr. Khaparde also laid down the principle that when a case is brought to the Judicial Department it should not go out of it. That may be a counsel of perfection. But even if it is taken from the Magistrate for a moment by the action of the Governor General in Council, it still goes back a very short time afterwards to the Judicial Department. There is no permanent transfer of a case from the Judicial Department, and therefore it seems to me that the argument of the learned gentleman is purely academic. I mentioned, my Lord, the disability which exists in the case of transferred Sessions cases and which does not exist in the case of a case transferred from a Magistrate to a bench of judges. On the other hand, there is this great advantage, that no matter how eminent and how experienced a Magistrate may be, he cannot have more authority or more competence than a bench of three High Court Judges; thus both the accused and the Crown will gain by the transfer of the case from his court under clause 4."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"If I have your Excellency's permission I should like to say one word."

His Excellency the President :—"We are not discussing your amendment; we are discussing Mr. Patel's."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"I only wanted to explain one point."

His Excellency the President :—"A personal explanation?"

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"No."

8-18 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I am really surprised that my Hon'ble friend Mr. Kincaid should think that it would be to the advantage of the accused whose case is before a Magistrate, that his case should be transferred to the tribunal for disposal. He forgets that if the case before the Magistrate is allowed to proceed in the ordinary way it will be committed to the Court of Sessions, where he will have the advantage of a jury. He also forgets that on conviction he will have the right of appeal, and yet he thinks that if the case is sent to the Special Tribunal from the Magistrate, it will be an advantage, as if these provisions are enacted for the advantage of the accused. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Kincaid seems to think that in a case in which the whole evidence has been recorded by the Magistrate the tribunal to whom the case is transferred will be at liberty to read the evidence already recorded and will pass final orders. Well, that is another reason why I say such cases should not be dealt with under the provisions of this Act. Suppose a case is completed in a Magistrate's court, and the notification comes into force, before the order of committal is written, all that remains for the tribunal is to pass orders on the papers recorded by the Magistrate. That is the procedure that I object to. It will do an amount of harm and prejudice to the accused person, and I respectfully submit that such a procedure should not be allowed. After the case is fully gone into by the Magistrate, if the notification is issued, what will happen? Although the police have fully investigated the case and although the Magistrate has gone through the whole case, the procedure will be that now information will have to be laid before the Chief Justice. Now, is that a procedure at all desirable in cases which have already been investigated by the police and inquired into by the Magistrate? Under these circumstances, I submit the Council will see its way to accept this small amendment."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel; The President; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

The motion was put and negatived.

His Excellency the President :—" Mr. Khaparde, do you wish to move your amendment ? "

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" I did not intend to speak, but now I shall speak for two minutes and these two minutes I shall take to answer the two objections that were taken by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Kincaid. One is that to controvert my statement that once a case gets into the hands of the judiciary it should not pass into the hands of the executive, he said the District Magistrate often transfers cases, but the District Magistrate is a Magistrate and not an executive officer for the time being, so that objection does not hold I think.

" The other principle that I endeavoured to make out was that a case always goes through the judiciary and nobody else.

" In this case the interference as it is sought to be made would be from the Local Government or the Imperial Government, but not from the judicial authority.

" The third point which I wish to lay stress upon—and it is rather important—is in the case of part-heard cases. Magistrates can certainly dispose of the case on the evidence already recorded, but, I believe, the accused has also the right of demanding a trial de novo and he would not be able to claim a trial de novo here. These are practical difficulties which will arise and it is better to meet them beforehand. Therefore, I have submitted this proposal that when a case has been put before a Magistrate, it should not be sent to the Special Tribunal but left to be disposed of by the ordinary law of the land."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I do not propose to move my next amendment."*

* That in clause 4 (2) after the words " Court of Sessions " the following words be inserted :—

' or is undergoing a trial in respect thereof before a Magistrate.'

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Mr. H. Moncrieff Smith; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I beg to move ' that in clause 4 (2), for the words ' whether such offence was committed before or after ' the words ' if such offence was committed more than three months before ' be substituted. The clause will then read :—

' No order under sub-section (1) shall be made in respect of, or be deemed to include, any person who has been committed under the Code for trial before a High Court, or a Court of Session, but, save as aforesaid, an order under that sub-section may be made in respect of any scheduled offence if such offence was not committed more than three months before the issue of the notification under section 3 '."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" No, no. There is no ' not ' in the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I wish I could see the original."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I took the trouble to have it looked up."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I do not know whether it exists in the original; I do not wish to press it if the word ' not ' does not exist in the original."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. Moncrieff Smith :—" The Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment has been verified; it is as it stands in the list."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Then I do not press it."
The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

8-30 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move—

" That to sub-cause (4) of clause 4 the following be added :—

' calling upon him to show cause within such time as may be fixed by the Chief Justice why the trial should not be held in accordance with this Part. The Chief Justice may, if he thinks proper, extend such time on the application of the accused.'

" After the Local Government or officer deputed by the Local Government has filed an application before the Chief Justice, the clause says :—

' The Chief Justice may by order require any information to be amended so as to supply further particulars of the offence charged to the accused, and shall direct a copy of the information or the amended information, as the case may be, to be served upon the accused in such manner as the Chief Justice may direct ' (and if my amendment is accepted) ' calling upon him to show cause within such time as may be fixed by the Chief Justice why the trial should not be held in accordance with this Part. The Chief Justice may, if he thinks proper, extend such time on the application of the accused.'

Well, my Lord, the principle of this matter has been disposed of so far as it related to the action of the Local Government, and it was lost. I have no reason to believe that my amendment will receive a better fate, but still I must place it on record.

" My Lord, it seems to me this is a very reasonable proposal. When you are going to take away the jurisdiction of the ordinary Court, deprive a man of the safeguards which an ordinary trial affords to him, the safeguard, for instance, of the commitment proceedings, of a jury trial, of an appeal, when you are taking away all these things from him, why not hear him before the final order is passed? You are not bound to accept what he prays for, but I say do hear him. Strike but hear. This is the amendment I wish to place before the Council."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I am afraid that this amendment, though possibly not so intended, would really have the effect of frustrating a great object of the Bill which is to secure an expeditious trial. I have tried to explain repeatedly that the prisoners in this case will be put before a very strong Court, as good a tribunal as we could possibly choose, namely, three Judges of the High Court, and the reasons for which the prisoner is put before that tribunal are reasons of State and affecting the public interests. The Chief Justice cannot be in a position to know whether the requirements of the public peace or the state of the country make a speedy trial by this tribunal necessary. It is not as if the men were being put before an incompetent or other than a very impartial and strong tribunal. If I may refer again to this Act of 1908 of which we are said to be so ignorant, may I say that there is no provision there at all similar to the proposed amendment, and I have never heard of any injustice occurring by reason of the omission of it."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Just one word, my Lord, with reference to the objection that has been raised by the Hon'ble the Home Member that the Chief Justice may not know the grounds which render a speedy trial necessary. I would ask what is there to prevent these facts being placed before the Chief Justice by the Local Government? We do not ask for an ex parte order. Let all the facts be placed before the Chief Justice. Then, no doubt, it will be a great luxury which the accused will have of being tried by three High Court Judges, but will he be able to pay for the luxury which a trial before these three High Court Judges will entail? I do not think the objections urged by the Hon'ble the Home Member are very convincing."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move—that the following sub-clause be added to clause 4:—

'(5) The Chief Justice may direct that the accused, if in custody or under arrest, be produced before him and when he is produced before him, or without directing that he be produced, order that he be admitted to bail.'

"My Lord, there is nothing in this Bill to show where the accused will be or in what condition when the application will be made before the Chief Justice. I presume he will be in the custody of the Government securely lodged in the lock-up. But it is not enough to know where he will be or what his condition will be. My submission is that before he is called upon to stand his trial the question of his admission to bail should be decided. It may be that the offence with which he is charged is bailable because you will find a long list of offences given in the Schedule, many of which are bailable, and although it may not be bailable, still the circumstances may be such as not only to justify a man's admission to bail, but to make it eminently desirable that he should be on bail. Therefore, my Lord, I think that this is a matter that ought to be made clear, and my submission is that the Chief Justice ought to have full power to deal with this matter and ought to be empowered to pass orders for bail."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent.—"As I have told the Hon'ble Member before this meeting, if he will withdraw this particular amendment, I am quite prepared to insert—if he will move an amendment or even if the Council will allow me to move an amendment—an amendment in clause 19 (2) which will meet the contingency to which he adverts, and will enable the Chief Justice to allow bail in these cases. As a matter of fact, this goes a little further than the Act of 1908, but it seems to me to be a very fair provision. I believe I am right in saying that the Hon'ble Member is prepared to accept it."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, so far as that is concerned, I am perfectly willing to accept the Hon'ble the Home Member's suggestion We must be thankful for small mercies. I understood from the Hon'ble the Home Member that the Government are prepared to accept the principle. I therefore beg to withdraw my amendment ; but in doing so I cannot resist the temptation of relating a small story here."

Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

His Excellency the President :—" Perhaps the Hon'ble Member will refrain this afternoon."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

The motion that clause 4 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 5 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I have this amendment to clause 5 :—

'That in clause 5 after the words ' to him ' the following words be inserted :—

and after considering any cause shown by the accused and further inquiry, if any, which he considers necessary.'

" This is merely a consequential amendment, my Lord. As my amendment* has been rejected, it is not necessary for me to move it. I therefore beg leave to withdraw this amendment."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I beg to move :—

'That in clause 5, for the words ' the Chief Justice shall ' the words ' the Chief Justice may after hearing the accused ' be substituted.'

The Council will see that I do not desire that the Chief Justice should be empowered to make any inquiry whatsoever. All I want is that if on the face of the information laid before the Chief Justice, there is no case to go to the special tribunal, the accused should be allowed an opportunity to have his say in the matter and the Chief Justice to be empowered to throw out the information. I submit the Council ought to allow an opportunity to the accused person to show that on the face of the information there is no case against him. With these few words I move this amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I have nothing to add to the argument that I used in respect of a previous amendment of exactly the same character. The Chief Justice is not, and cannot be, in a position to know whether the requirements of the country necessitate a trial under this Part or not. I must therefore oppose the amendment."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I beg to move that in clause 5 after the words ' three of the ' the word ' permanent ' be inserted. In substance it would be that the Chief Justice should appoint three permanent Judges of the High Court. It is a matter of some importance and a matter not free from difficulty. I ask that the Chief Justice should select three permanent High Court Judges in pursuance of the principle enunciated by the Rowlatt Committee in paragraph 182 of their Report, with a view to inspire confidence in the public, and in order that the administration of justice may not be exposed to the criticism that officiating judges appointed for the purpose should have control in such matters. It has been suggested in the report that Judges of the High Court should be asked to try the cases. What they say is this:—

‘It seems to us inadvisable that these tribunals should to any extent be composed of persons not already members of the judiciary but selected by the executive for the purpose of the specific case. Nothing that we have seen suggests that the special tribunals hitherto appointed have been unfair towards the accused, but we think the objections in principle cannot be overlooked.’

“Now in giving effect to that recommendation there are considerable difficulties to be faced. The High Court may at any time consist of permanent Judges, of acting Judges and of temporary Judges. The temporary Judges may have been appointed or may be appointed to dispose of arrears of work generally, or may be appointed in view of special exigencies arising, such as the trial of cases of this description. Now these officiating Judges may be appointed by the Government for a particular case, or they may be appointed generally for the purpose of these cases. But the trouble is, once they are appointed officiating Judges of the High Court, should a number of cases arise after the trial of the particular case is over, there would be nothing to prevent cases under this Act that might come up thereafter in the High Court from being referred to the temporary judge? I think that in principle there ought to be no distinction made between one Judge of the High Court and another Judge of the High Court. I am strongly against the enforcement of any principle which would vitiate the sound maxim of the perfect equality of the Judges. But once you appoint officiating Judges to clear off arrears, the criticism that these Judges are appointed by the Government with reference to their particular tendencies would still remain, and they would be exposed to the charge that being only acting Judges or officiating Judges they may unconsciously be biassed by the hope of being made permanent or influenced by the fear of incurring the displeasure of Government. I am not stating that any Hon’ble Judges of the High Court would be actuated in practice by such considerations. I am not suggesting that for a moment. But the members of the Rowlatt Committee as well as the public, I think, are perfectly justified in asking that the administration of justice should be above suspicion. Therefore our object must be to prevent officiating Judges from trying these specific cases. Well, then, if we are to prevent these Judges from trying such cases, what is to be done? There seems to be only one way and that is to rely upon another principle, namely, that is in providing for special tribunals for a specific purpose we contemplate the trial only by permanent Judges of the High Court. That is the only way to escape from that dilemma of not drawing a distinction between one Judge of the High Court and another. We contemplate only permanent Judges of the High Court because they are always there. We constitute them as special tribunals, having regard to the particular exigencies of this piece of legislation. We are not thereby infringing the generally accepted maxim that no distinction should be drawn between one Judge and another. I hope therefore that in asking for the constitution of a bench of three permanent Judges of the High Court, we are not deviating from that maxim, while at the same time we are safeguarding ourselves against the just suspicion, or at any rate, against the suspicion of the public that officiating Judges may have too much to do in the trial of cases of this description. I submit, My Lord, as I have said, the point is not free from difficulties; but I think in the interests of the administration of justice and on this specific ground that we are constituting new tribunals for a particular purpose, there would be nothing wrong in providing for the appointment of three permanent Judges of the High Court to try cases under this Act.”

The Hon’ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—“My Lord, I desire ^{3-45 P.M.} to support this amendment of my Hon’ble friend, Mr. Sarma. I think that it is not fair to the accused, not fair to the officiating Judges of the High Court and not fair to the Government, that a trial like this should take place before Judges who have yet to be confirmed. Now what is the charm about a permanent Judge of the High Court? The charm is not that he is necessarily abler than another Judge, but that he is thoroughly independent; he has got no favours to expect and no frowns to fear from any one. If you really want to inspire confidence in trials like these by Judges of the High Court, it is only fair that you should give us, if I may use the expression, pucca Judges of the High Court, not men who have still got to be confirmed, a trial by whom will not inspire, to my mind, the same degree of confidence as a trial by Judges who have already been confirmed."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"My Lord, I desire to support this amendment. I need not recapitulate the reasons which have been urged. I remember that this point was mentioned in the Select Committee, I think, by my Hon'ble friend, Pundit Madan Mohan Malaviya, and if my memory serves me right, the Hon'ble the Home Member was inclined to favour the proposal.....

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise to a point of order, my Lord. I have always understood that proceedings in Select Committee are confidential save in so far as they are disclosed in the Report; in any case my memory does not coincide with that of the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"I will withdraw that reference to the Select Committee. I draw from my own resources, and I will say that so far as my impressions go without reference to the proceedings of the Select Committee, I was under the belief that the Hon'ble the Home Member was inclined to accept.....

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise again to a point of order and ask on what occasion I made the statement to the Hon'ble Member?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"In that case I should be disclosing a proceeding which you do not want me to disclose. But I stand upon absolutely unassailable ground in expressing the impression that I have formed. I do think apart from what passed in Select Committee which may be confidential, the reasons in favour of the amendment seem to be absolutely unassailable, and it strikes me that in a matter of this-kind my Hon'ble friend and the Government may see their way to accede to the proposal which has been put forward. It would inspire confidence and, I think, it is the right thing to do, and therefore I appeal with some little confidence to the Hon'ble Member, apart from the proceedings of the Select Committee, to accede to the amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett:—"My Lord, it is necessary that I should say a few words just to explain what the Rowlatt Committee really meant. Their meaning was somewhat misrepresented, no doubt unintentionally, by my friend, Mr. Sarma, when he spoke on the 7th of February. He said: 'There can be no doubt that the Rowlatt Committee meant that acting Judges should not be appointed to these tribunals. That is not what the Rowlatt Committee meant.....

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I just say, my Lord, one word of explanation. I did not say acting judges; I meant Judges appointed ad hoc."

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett:—"I will quote exactly what the Hon'ble Member said directly. What the Rowlatt Committee wrote was this. At the end of their paragraph 182 they say: 'Substitutes can be appointed for the judges called away, and if there is no power it can be obtained. Substitutes, however, ought not to try these cases.' What they meant was that substitutes appointed ad hoc should not be appointed to try these cases. They did not mean that judges who were already acting on High Courts should not be appointed to try these cases. They did not intend to interfere with the discretion of the Chief Justice in such matters. My Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, said the following on the 7th of February. He was referring to a member of our Committee. 'I have the highest respect for my distinguished friend, a Judge from Madras, and I say from my knowledge of him that he could not have allowed any corrupt or personal motives to creep into his decision. But still the Rowlatt Committee has said that the future is to be safeguarded by permanent judges of the High Court being placed on these tribunals, thereby showing distinctly their opinion that Government were not altogether happy in choosing an acting man'. Well, my Lord, the Rowlatt Committee did not say this or did not mean what the Hon'ble gentleman thinks they meant. They certainly never dreamt of showing distinctly an opinion which they never for one single moment entertained."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir Verney Lovett ; Mr. C. A. Kincaid ; Sir William Vincent ; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid :—"I wanted to say just one word, my Lord. Since the Simla Session of this Council last year, I have been a member of a High Court which contains four judges, of which not one single member is permanent. In these circumstances Mr. Sarma's proposal for three permanent judges is absolutely impossible."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, there is in the report of this Committee, as far as I understand it, no suggestion that permanent judges only should be appointed on these tribunals. Further, I would point out that we have not provided in the Bill that the Executive Government should choose the judges for this duty. The judges will be chosen by the Chief Justice himself. We have followed exactly in this, I believe I am correct in making this statement, if not, the Hon'ble Member will correct me, the precedent of the Act of 1908. There is no distinction as far as I know in the powers of an officiating temporary or permanent judge. They have exactly the same authority in the matter of hearing appeals in matters of life and death, and they can inflict any sentence that is authorised by the law. I do not think that it can be said with any justice that an officiating judge of a High Court is open to any suspicion of dishonesty or liable to attack or that he is not as competent as anyone else ; and I suggest that if we accepted a modification of this kind we should really be accepting an amendment which constitutes almost a reflection on officiating judges, a reflection to which I should be very sorry to be a party. I repeat again that the Government will not choose the members of this tribunal. A further practical difficulty has already been alluded to by Mr. Kincaid, namely, that when many officers are on leave it might be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to secure the required number of permanent judges. For these reasons I must oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—"Your Excellency, as a layman not connected with any of these high offices and having no expectations in those quarters, I am in some difficulty as to how to give my vote. Time was when we used to think that persons occupying such exalted positions were above all temptation and that their character and independence were beyond question. But nowadays we have found permanent judges of the High Courts looking forward to other preferments. The Hon'ble Dr. Sapru said that a man who had risen to a permanent judgeship had afterwards nothing to look to, neither fears nor favours.

"We have seen that High Court Judges have been made members of the Executive Council, and members of the Executive Council have subsequently become High Court Judges. There is at least one gentleman hovering about between these offices and not yet settled down. I think we shall give the benefit of the presumption to everybody, permanent or officiating, and say that they are all above suspicion."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I pointed out the difficulty and I thought I had suggested a way out of it. What happens? There are a large number of temporary judges and if the permanent strength is exhausted having regard to these exceptional trials, three or four temporary judges are appointed to work off the arrears that have accumulated. The objections which the Rowlatt Committee had was to temporary judges appointed ad hoc trying these offences, and they suggested that substitutes should be found to do the work which might fall into arrears. Officiating judges may be appointed when once a trial is on, but the moment that trial is over they cannot be said to have been appointed for the purpose of these trials and would not come within the rule. Therefore the difficulty remains that the Chief Justice would not in practice be able to provide against these substitutes really sitting on the Bench, and in any event we shall be throwing on the Chief Justice an invidious duty by compelling him to draw a distinction between judges and judges unless you provide by Statute that he should appoint only from among permanent judges. When a judge is appointed to clear off arrears he cannot be said to be a judge appointed ad hoc for a particular trial; he would be sitting to try offenders under these Acts. Therefore the objections which the Rowlatt Committee anticipated would in practice remain whatever may be the desire of the Chief Justice or of the Governor General in Council. Therefore if on the special tribunals you provide that only permanent judges of the High Court should sit, there would be no slur on any particular person. This is a specific Act providing for a particular occasion, and consequently in drawing upon your staff of officers who are always on the permanent lists, there is no harm. It is possible to defend this statutory limitation on more than one ground, and that is the reason why I have suggested the amendment to prevent the Chief Justice from falling into obvious difficulties, and in order that the administration of justice may not be exposed to the criticisms to which it is sure to be exposed especially when seditious trials are held. The only way out of the difficulty is to enact this statutory limitation. Power should be taken, as I have suggested, by the Government to transfer cases to a High Court where there are more permanent judges than five who can dispose of this work."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My amendment* is similar to the one just disposed of and I beg leave to withdraw it."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I beg to withdraw my amendment that in the proviso to clause 5 after the words 'two such' and after the words 'who are' the word 'permanent' be inserted."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

4 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, my amendment runs as follows:—

'That after clause 5 the following clause be inserted:—

'5-A. (1) The Court of criminal appeal under this Act shall consist of the Judges of the High Court within the jurisdiction of which the Special Tribunal held its sittings and not less than five of any of those Judges may sit and exercise the powers of the Court:

"Provided that when the number of the Judges of the High Court does not exceed four, the Chief Justice may nominate not more than one Judge and shall complete the Court by the nomination of the rest from either of the following classes:—

- (a) Persons who have served as permanent Judges of the High Court, or
- (b) With the consent of the Chief Justice of another High Court, persons who are Judges of that High Court:

* That in clause 5 before the words 'High Court Judges' the word 'permanent' be inserted and that in clause (b) of the proviso to clause 5, before the words 'Judges of that High Court' the word 'permanent' be inserted.

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. G. S. Khaparde.]

Provided further that a Judge who sat in the Special Tribunal shall not sit in the Court of criminal appeal on any appeal against a conviction by that special tribunal to which he was a party.

‘(2) The determination of any appeal shall be according to the determination of a majority of the Judges who heard the appeal.’

“I have taken the wording of this amendment partly from 45 and 46 Victoria, Chapter XXV, and partly from clause 5. It is usually said that, where there is a Court of three High Court Judges you don't want an appeal. In Ireland they have a Court which is similar to ours, but notwithstanding that they have provided for appeal there and there is no reason shown why there is no appeal allowed here. I believe there is an argument that when three Judges have decided a case a further appeal is unnecessary, but this is allowed in the case of the corresponding Irish Act, and it seems to me that where a case of life and death has to be decided this is throwing too much responsibility on the Court to decide the matter finally.

“In England, a Judge tries the case with the assistance of a Jury of 12, in this country we have only 9, and then the Judge summarises the case and judgment is pronounced. Under the Law the majority of the Jurors are able to decide by their verdict, and there are other safeguards. The three Judges may be very highly qualified, but still I believe it is anomalous to make that question final. As regards Ireland I think its state was worse than that of India, and I hope India will never reach the state of Ireland in this respect. As I said I have taken this from 45 and 46 Victoria. Section 3 of that Act runs: ‘the Court of Criminal appeal under this Act shall consist of Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland with the exception of the Lord Chancellor and any of these Judges, no less than three may sit to exercise the powers of the Court.’ The first part will be found in the transcript of this in which it is said that with the exception of the Lord Chancellor any of the other Judges shall preside over the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland, and I do not know why they excepted the Lord Chancellor presiding in these courts, and I have not discovered the reason. I have omitted that also. I suppose the Chief Justice in India would be about the same as Lord Chancellor in Ireland.

“Then the proviso to this section I have taken from clause 5 which we have already passed which speaks of the total number of Judges. I am aware that there are some High Courts in India which have got only four Judges and not more, and in their case if three Judges are nominated, there would be left only one Judge or the Chief Justice, so in constituting the Appellate Court he will nominate one Judge. The Judge nominated will be himself and he will complete the court by nominating persons mentioned in sub-clause (a) or (b) in the preceding section. If necessary I suppose he will apply to the neighbouring High Courts to complete the Court and in that way the appeal will be heard. I have also provided, my Lord,—and that amendment will come later on—I have also provided for the right of appeal. Now suppose in this particular instance in appeal the majority of the Judges are to decide the case. Three Judges hold one way and they acquit the man and two other Judges convict him, the man will be acquitted, and if the three Judges convict him, and he is acquitted by the other two, then he is convicted. There is an amendment about this which will come later on which is also in accordance with the provisions of the Crimes Act, namely, that the Judges should be unanimous, anyhow I shall not bring that matter into this subject. There are two points which the Council will have to vote upon, first whether an appeal should be permitted, and if the appeal is permitted, whether it should be in this form. The reason why there should be an appeal I have indicated already because the whole work of 12 jurors in England is done by 9 jurors in India, and three gentlemen, however estimable and good they may be, cannot be expected to come to a right decision.

“The second reason is that human life and human liberty are so sacred that we should safeguard them as much as possible. Thirdly, there will be no

Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi ; The President.*]

delay in this matter. Fourthly, that involves no inconvenience to the Government in any way. Government get their object of speedy trial ; if the man deserves to be punished he will be punished soon, and there is nothing lost in giving him a chance of defending himself or taking the chance of being acquitted by a higher court. We know that in Ireland a man committed a grievous offence, I think he was Sir Casement or somebody which led to very serious things. But with all that he was given the chance of an appeal before the Lord Chancellor of England, where of course it was rejected, but that is another matter, but he had a chance. So by the method you propose you take away the chances of appeal or the man being saved by a higher court. That, I think, is one of the matters to which I referred yesterday as being a matter of fundamental rights. Under the law he must have a chance of appeal. To take away the chances of a person of saving himself by appeal is not right, and that was what I was trying to make out yesterday as against the fundamental laws of the realm, and it is a fundamental law that should obtain in India. Yesterday I remember the eminent Jurist the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes mentioned to us the Regulation passed in 1818 which can take away the liberty of a person, and asked us why we should complain about it now. Well, I had not the opportunity of replying to it, but to-day I think I can mention, that Regulation was passed in 1818, but then India was not administered by the Crown, it was administered by the John Company, and we came under the Crown in the year 1858, and therefore the law constituting this Council says that all laws passed after the year 1858 shall be binding. I particularly mentioned it yesterday. Before that or some time about that the Crown assumed the government of India and since then the great Queen's Proclamation which we always cite as the Magna Charta of our liberties

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" May I rise to a point of order ? May I inquire what this has got to do with the right of appeal ? "

The Hon'ble Mr G. S. Khaparde :—" I beg to submit that to take away the right of appeal is tantamount to taking away the right of liberty which was conferred upon us by Her Majesty in Her Gracious Proclamation. "

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—" May I point out that according to the scheme of the Bill section 5 refers to the constitution of the court, section 6 to place of sitting, then come certain intervening sections which refer to the trial, then comes section 15 which refers to conviction for offences referred to in the Schedule, and clause 16 refers to sentence. Then comes section 17 which says that ' the judgment of the Court shall be final, ' so that the question is not pertinent under that section, section 5 merely deals with the constitution of the court. As I myself have an amendment to section 17 which relates to the question of the right of appeal, it seems to me necessary to point out here that the question of the right of appeal is irrelevant unless it is incidental to the constitution of the Court. "

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" In regard to what has fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi, I wish to point out that we must know what constitutes the court of appeal, and when this court of appeal is accepted, then it is time to think of the appeal. When there is no appeal court at all

His Excellency the President :—" You had better first establish your case for right of appeal, and then if you can get the Council to accept that, I think there will be no doubt about establishing a court of appeal. "

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" I submit my amendment may be taken at the end of clause 17. "

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [The President ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; Sir George Lowndes.]

His Excellency the President :—" All right, we will leave it there."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" Thank you, your Excellency."

The motion that clause 5, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 6, as amended by the Select Committee, do form part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I beg to move that in the proviso to clause 6, for the words 'the Court shall' the words 'the Court may' be substituted and the words 'for reasons to be recorded in writing' be deleted. So that the proviso will then read as follows.— 4-13 P.M.

' Provided that if the Advocate-General certifies to the Court that it is in his opinion necessary in the interests of justice that the whole or any part of a trial shall be held at some place other than the usual place of sitting of the High Court the Court may, after hearing the accused, make an order to that effect unless, it thinks fit to make any other order.'

" The point raised by this amendment, my Lord, is that the Court should have full discretion to determine the place of its sitting. Because the Advocate-General certifies to the Court that in his opinion it is necessary that the whole or any part of a trial shall be held at some place other than the usual place, the Court should not be bound as it were to accept that opinion and pass the order accordingly. In substituting the word 'may' for the word 'shall' I leave this discretion to the Court. Secondly, in asking this Council to delete the words 'for reasons to be recorded in writing', I want that the Court should not be under any obligation to record in writing any reasons for making any order as regards the place of its sitting. You will find from the next clause, it will not be necessary for the certificate of the Advocate-General to be supported by any affidavit, nor shall he be required to state the grounds upon which such certificate was given. I respectfully submit it is unfair that the law should ask the High Court to state its ground for refusing the application of the Advocate-General and at the same time for the Legislature to say that the Advocate-General shall not be bound to state the grounds on which he bases his application. I submit that if you leave the Advocate-General free to give his certificate without stating any grounds, you should also leave the Court to dispose of the application of the Advocate-General without stating any reasons. With these few words I move the amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, there does not seem to be very much point in this amendment. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel does not want the Court to be obliged to state reasons, and he bases that on the fact that the Advocate-General is not to be obliged to state the grounds of his application. But the two things are not on a par at all. The Advocate-General's statement is based on confidential information, while the order of the Court is necessarily based on a judicial finding, and therefore there is no reason why the Court should not state the reasons for its judgment. In 99 cases out of a hundred it would do so. I am quite content to leave it to the Court to record its reasons or not as it pleases, if the Hon'ble Mr. Patel thinks there is anything in it; but I am not prepared to accept the other part of his amendment because it is not only bad English but bad sense. You can hardly say the Court 'may' do so and so 'unless' it does something else. The two proper alternatives are shall do one thing unless it has to do something else. If my Hon'ble friend is prepared to accept this suggestion, I am ready to meet him to that extent; otherwise I must ask the Council to reject the amendment."

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President ; Sir George Lowndes ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I am perfectly willing if the Council accepts it. I am in the hands of the Council ; I have no objection to the proposed change."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" It is for the Council to decide and I am one of the Council, and so far as I am concerned, I have already said I have no objection."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" If that is so I am quite willing to move an amendment to the amendment—that the words 'for reasons to be recorded in writing' shall be deleted."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" If you will allow me to suggest an amendment to the amendment which the Hon'ble Law Member has suggested, it would probably put the matter in a clearer position than that in which it stands at present. My friend objected to the words 'the Court may' being substituted for the words 'the Court shall,' and now he deletes the words 'for reasons to be recorded in writing'."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I have only suggested the deletion of these words if it satisfies Mr. Patel and he said it does."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I have not said it satisfies me ; I merely said I had no objection if the Council accepted it."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" Do I understand that Mr. Patel desires to press his amendment ? If so, I leave it to the Council. If Mr. Patel is not prepared to withdraw his amendment and accept mine then I move no amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I say I have not the slightest objection to my friend's amendment if the Council does not object to it."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" Does the Hon'ble Member withdraw his amendment ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I am perfectly willing to withdraw my amendment."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—" I hope your Lordship will allow me to say something before Mr. Patel withdraws his amendment. He may be very much satisfied in accepting the change in his amendment, but I have the very greatest objection to it. I think the court must be required to state its reasons, to be recorded in writing. I certainly think that Mr. Patel is not strengthening the position of the accused ; he is weakening it."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I am very sorry my friend Dr. Sapru finds fault with me ; I have already stated that if the Council is of that opinion I have not the slightest objection."

His Excellency the President :—" I think it will be most convenient if we deal with Mr Patel's amendment as not withdrawn."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" There are two parts to Mr. Patel's amendment ; one is the substitution of the word 'may' for 'shall' and the other is the deletion of the words 'for reasons to be recorded in writing.' I want to know, my Lord, whether either of these is withdrawn."

His Excellency the President :—No, they are both before the Council."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" With reference to the proposal that the word 'may' should be substituted for the word 'shall', I would ask your Lordship's permission to suggest not only that the word 'may' be substituted for the word 'shall', but also that the words which come subsequently to 'after hearing the accused, make an order to that effect,' should be entirely omitted. If it commends itself to your Excellency, I should like to make that amendment because that would meet the objection of the Hon'ble the Law Member. It should be left entirely to the discretion of the Court. The proposal relates to the Court which will consist of three High Court Judges, and I think it is not very complimentary to such a Court to say in a Statute that the Court shall order that a trial shall be held at some time and place other than the usual place of sitting of the High Court at the request of the Advocate-General. I think it should simply be left to the Court, after hearing the accused, to decide whether it would or would not pass such an order. My whole objection to the wording of the proviso as it stands is that it is not complimentary to the Court to say that the Court shall, at the request of the Advocate-General, pass a certain order. It would be more in keeping with the dignity of the Court to say that the Court may pass such an order."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, it is really very difficult to know where we are with Hon'ble Members in this Council. We are usually told that the model we should follow is the Irish Crimes Act. The Hon'ble Pandit now tells us that it is derogatory to the High Court to allow the Advocate-General to make application upon these terms. But if I may read to the Council what the provision in the Irish Crimes Act is, on this point he will see that we have in this case followed it. Section 6(1) of that Act says :—

'The Attorney General on making an application to the High Court of Justice or a judge thereof, and certifying that in his opinion it is expedient in the interests of justice that a person awaiting his trial for an indictable offence should be tried in some county named in the certificate other than the county in which he would otherwise be tried, shall be entitled as of right to an order directing such person to be tried in the county named in the certificate.'

Therefore, under the Irish Act, it is a case of the Attorney General making an application and being entitled as of right to have a change of venue."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" May I say one word. If my Hon'ble friend is willing to accept the other provisions of the Irish Act which support the amendments here, I will accept his proposition."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I am not prepared to accept the Hon'ble Pandit's amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I would only point out that, as the wording of the proviso stands, we would be led into very great difficulties if not into ridiculous positions. The Advocate-General is shown certain confidential papers by the Government which, naturally, he would not be able to disclose to the High Court. He need not support his statement by any affidavit; he is not also asked to state any reasons on which the certificate is given. So the Advocate-General informs the High Court 'I would like that this trial should take place in such and such a place.' Then the accused is asked to be heard. The accused does not know the grounds upon which the Government, i.e., the Advocate-General, wants a trial to take place in any particular place. He has to draw upon his imagination. He has therefore to anticipate the grounds upon which it is possible that the Government has asked that a trial should take place in a certain locality and then to meet those arguments, which perhaps have or have not been in the contemplation of the Government and ask the High Court not to accept the recommendations of the Advocate-General. Well, that is the position of the accused. What is the position of the High Court? The High Court is really reduced to this position that it is merely the amanuensis or the clerk of the Advocate-General. It has to say 'The Advocate-General says so, we accept it because the accused is not in a position to meet that case,' or it has to say 'We reject this application because we do not know the grounds upon which the learned Advocate-General certifies that this trial should take place in a particular locality. Therefore we are not able to say that the accused in opposing it is wrong, so that, inasmuch as no grounds have been placed before us, we reject this application.' I think there should be a stereotyped order in the High Court, namely, 'the High Court rejects this application inasmuch as it does not know the grounds on which this application is based'. I submit that greater confidence should be reposed in the discretion of the High Court, and the word 'shall' ought to be replaced by 'may'. If it is not to be, then I think, later on, the Government should undertake to express the reasons in asking that their request through the Advocate-General should be taken into consideration. I hope that the whole proviso will be taken into consideration together and not piecemeal, and that the word 'shall' would be replaced by 'may' giving the High Court an opportunity of doing what it likes and of compelling the Advocate-General or the Government to state its reasons."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"So far as I am concerned, I would rather like to accept the amendment of my Hon'ble friend the Panditji and withdraw mine, so that one amendment, i.e., Panditji's amendment, may be put to the vote."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—"I do certainly object to these words 'unless for reasons to be recorded in writing' being deleted. I attach great weight to them, and I think it will lead to a great deal of satisfaction on the part of the accused if he knows what are the reasons for the Court taking any particular action. My Lord, there is no question of dignity involved. My learned friend the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya thinks that it is not consistent with the dignity of the High Court that the Advocate-General should give a certificate like that. As a matter of fact we know that the Advocate-General does give certificates in regard to certain matters. I would much rather have reasons, good, bad, or indifferent, than go without any reasons."

4-30 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—"I see there is some misapprehension in the mind of the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru. If he reads this clause carefully he will see that the High Court is required to give its reasons, provided it makes an order against the certificate of the Advocate-General, not otherwise. That is the point, and, therefore, it seems to me that if this clause stands as it is, the Advocate-General will not be bound to give any reasons for a certificate. He will present his certificate and ask the High Court that the trial should take place in a particular place. The High Court shall make an order to that effect unless, for reasons to be stated by the High Court, it chooses to make any other order, namely, any other order against the certificate of the Advocate-General. Therefore, the High Court is called upon to give its reasons only in case it does not comply with the certificate. It means this that when the High Court will be called upon to say 'I do not accept the certificate,' the High Court is obliged to give the reasons in writing. Well, I can quite understand the point of the Hon'ble the Law Member why the

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[*Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru ;
The President ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.*]

Advocate-General presents his certificate without giving his reasons or his grounds, namely, that he may not be able to disclose certain matters which are confidential matters. But surely if you give the accused an opportunity of being heard on this point, namely, whether a trial is to take place in a particular place or not, then it follows that you must give full discretion to the High Court to decide either in favour of the certificate of the Advocate-General or in favour of the accused, and that you should not compel the High Court to give reasons only in case it decides against the Advocate-General. Of course, if you like to follow the Irish Act you can follow it; you can follow anything you like. But you have not followed the Irish Act, you have gone beyond it, and if you are going to give an accused person an opportunity of being heard, then surely it is not consistent with the dignity of the High Court to call upon it to give reasons only if it decides in favour of the accused."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—"I should like to understand whether the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah meant by the word 'shall' that it is imperative upon the Court to pass an order in favour of the certificate granted by the Advocate-General. I do not think it is imperative so long as the words 'unless for reasons to be recorded in writing' are there. Therefore, it seems to me that the Court is not bound to grant an order in favour of the Advocate-General. I am quite clear about it; there is no confusion in my mind. It seems to me that my learned friend seems to attach too much importance to the word 'may'. There is no charm about the word 'may'."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—"My point is a simple one. I think I have made myself clear. What I say is this, that the Court shall make an order to that effect, namely, an order to the effect that the Advocate-General wants unless—perhaps the Hon'ble Member (Dr. Sapru) will allow me to finish—unless the High Court is prepared to state its reasons in writing: in that case, it can make an order to the contrary."

His Excellency the President :—"Do you wish to speak again?"

• The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"Just a few words, my Lord. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Jinnah has made the first part of this amendment quite clear. As regards the second part. The words in the proviso 'The Court shall make an order to that effect' are followed by the clause 'unless for reasons to be recorded in writing it thinks fit to make any other order.' Now, as it has been pointed out the Court will not be given the reasons upon which the Advocate-General would want the transfer of a case, and yet the Court will be required to pass an order as demanded by the Advocate-General unless it gives reasons why it should pass a different order. Are you placing the Court in a fair position? You say that it must pass an order as demanded by the Advocate-General, and that if it chooses to pass a different order, it must give reasons in writing for doing so, but you at the same time provide that the Advocate-General shall not be required to state the reasons upon which his application shall be based. That will not be fair to the Court."

His Excellency the President :—"Do I understand that the Council are willing that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment shall be put to it as amended by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, because if so, I will put the amendment in that form. The amendment will then run as follows :

'That in the proviso to clause 6, for the words 'the Court shall' the words 'the Court may' be substituted and the words 'unless for reasons to be recorded in writing it thinks fit to make any other order' be deleted.'

[The President ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

4 44 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—“ My Lord, I had better read out the amendment first : It is that in the proviso to clause 6 for the words from the word ‘ make ’ to the words ‘ any other order ’ the following words be substituted :—

‘ Make such order as it deems fit and shall order the expenses of the person charged, his witnesses and counsel to be paid by Government.’

The amended proviso would run as follows :—

‘ Provided that if the Advocate-General certifies to the Court that it is, in his opinion, necessary in the interests of justice that the whole or any part of a trial shall be held at some place other than the usual place of sitting of the High Court, the Court shall, after hearing the accused, make such order as it deems fit and shall order the expenses of the person charged, his witnesses and counsel to be paid by Government. . . . ’

The gist of my amendment is that if this application is made by the Advocate-General to the High Court and if the High Court accepts the recommendations of the Advocate-General and orders the case to be tried elsewhere, then the expenses that will accrue to the accused for going there and getting all his witnesses there and getting his lawyers there and all those things, those should be borne by the Government. The Court in making that order may also make a similar order. The authority for this is, as correctly guessed, the Irish Prevention of Crimes Act of 1892. I think I had better read the other portion of the section ; the first part was read out to the Council by the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes showing what the law in Ireland was. If

[*Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Sir James DuBoulay ;

the Court complies with the request of the Advocate-General then clause (2) of that section which reads as follows should apply :

‘The Lord Lieutenant shall from time to time provide for the payment, if an order is made under this section respecting the trial of any person, of the reasonable expenses of such person coming to the place at which, in pursuance of such order, he is to be tried in any case where he was admitted to bail and also of the witnesses required for the defence of such person, and certified by the Court before whom he is tried to be so required.’

It means that if the Advocate-General's application succeeds and the venue is transferred, then the expenses which necessarily will have to be incurred by the accused, if he is free in going there (if he is not free the Government takes him free of charge), the expense of his witnesses and his lawyers will have to be provided for. I think, one reason for this provision is that this application may not be lightly made. Supposing a person was being tried in Bombay; he might have friends there; he will be able to arrange easily for his defence and his witnesses may be living there. If they take the trial in the Punjab and say ‘The offence might have been committed in Bombay, but it is better to try him in the Punjab’, then in that case if the Court agrees to it, the Court should also say to the Government ‘You pay the expenses which are incidental to this transfer.’ The accused's lawyer has to go to the Punjab, his witnesses and so on. I think this is intended both for the protection of the person charged and also for the protection of the Government itself so that an application will not be made lightly, more especially since no reasons are to be assigned. It is to be merely a certificate, and in giving that certificate he need not give his reasons. I propose that the Court may make such order as it thinks fit and provide that if the case is transferred that provision should be made for the payment of his witnesses and pleaders and so on. This is in accordance with clause (2) of section 6 of 45 and 46 Vict., c. 25, and to me appears to be designed for the protection both of the Crown as well as of the accused, and I trust that this Council will accept this proposal as it is very good indeed, more especially since it came to be very nearly accepted in one part, but unfortunately it missed the mark; let me see if this will succeed now.”

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—“My Lord, I am afraid that Government must oppose this amendment. It is divided into three parts, namely, the question of first the person charged, secondly, his witnesses and thirdly, his counsel. Mr. Khaparde has quoted the Prevention of Crimes Act. It has been referred to frequently to-day; and Mr. Khaparde referred to it in justification of his proposal for the payment of expenses. I do not think he will find anything in the Crimes Act about counsel or about witnesses. It is limited so far as I can see to ‘the expenses of such person coming to the place at which in pursuance of such order he is to be tried, in any case where he was admitted to bail.’ It refers only to his personal expenses. No! I see there is also provision for the payment of the expenses of witnesses. But may I point out that under clause 7 of the Bill the Criminal Procedure Code applies to proceedings under this Part; and under the provisions of the Code the expenses of witnesses are paid; so that in the matter of witnesses there is no necessity to make any special provisions. So far as the payment of counsel goes, I think I am right in saying that, when a man is tried for his life, in every province of India arrangements are made by order of the High Court—and we had considerable correspondence in the Home Department on this subject with Local Governments—arrangements are made that if a man is too poor to provide his own counsel, the Court should arrange for somebody to defend him. There is nowhere any suggestion in the Code that special provision for the accused's expenses should be made, and Government do not think that in this respect a man charged with revolutionary crime is entitled to be treated with any greater tenderness than in the case of ordinary offences.”

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—“There is some difficulty, my Lord, and I think in understanding the meaning of the amendment. This is how it is. The court shall after hearing the accused make such order as it deems

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri ; Sir George Lowndes ; [13TH MARCH, 1919.]
Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Sir James DuBoulay ;
Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.]

fit and shall order the expenses of the person charged, his witnesses and counsel to be paid by Government. Is this expenditure to be incurred by Government in the case of any order favourable or otherwise, even when actually refusing transfer of the venue of the Court? That is the meaning of the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde's amendment. I think it is in excess of his own intention as expressed in his speech."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"That is, I take it, the meaning of the clause as amended by Mr. Khaparde."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"I am very glad to hear that under the Criminal Procedure Code these expenses of the witness will be ordinarily paid and if the man is poor and unable to defend himself then Government will engage a pleader for him. I only wanted to make it clear so that it might come in here and not get ignored, this being a special enactment. I know that there is a section that the Criminal Procedure Code may apply in all cases in which it is not inconsistent with this. This payment is not part of the procedure; it is part of the grace or general consideration that is shown to a man because the law always presumes a man to be innocent until he is proved guilty. So if I am assured that that will apply here, I am content."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—"I am not sure whether the Hon'ble Member understood what I said, it was that the rules of the High Courts make provision that where a man is tried for his life the court shall provide him with a lawyer if he is too poor to afford one. That is the rule of the High Courts now. In this particular case the Chief Justice has power to make rules; he will no doubt make exactly the same rules in these as in other cases. I do not think that anything more than that is necessary."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"Then, if a man is to be transported for ten years the poor man will get nothing at all?"

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—"Exactly as at present."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"Well, I humbly submit that, considering that this is a special enactment and a special procedure, this concession may be given, and if I am assured that the Chief Justice will deal with this part of the case also and prescribe some scale on which payment will be made to enable the poor man to defend himself, then I shall be content. Otherwise, of course, I will take the general chance. That is what I have to submit."

The motion was put and negatived.

4-54 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul ;—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment which runs as follows :—

'That in the proviso to clause 6 the words from 'nor shall' to the end of the proviso' be deleted.

The clause will then run as follows :—

'The Court may sit for the whole or any part of a trial at "such place or places in the province as it may consider desirable :

'Provided that if the Advocate-General certifies to the court that it is in his opinion necessary in the interests of justice that the whole or any part of a trial shall be held at some place other than the usual place of sitting of the High Court, the Court shall, after hearing the accused, make an order to that effect, unless for reasons to be recorded in writing it thinks fit to make any other order. It shall not be necessary for the certificate of the Advocate-General to be supported by any affidavit.'

"My Lord, this clause has already been discussed so I do not intend to detain the Council very long. I do not approach the question from the lawyer's point of view, I look at it from a commonsense point of view; to me this proposal seems to be quite anomalous. I think it is not fair to the judges that the Advocate General should not state the reasons for having given the certificate. It is equally unfair to the accused that he should not know the reason why there should be a change of venue. I, therefore, think that the Advocate General should give his grounds so that the High Court may be in a position to form an independent opinion as to where the case should be finally tried and why. With these words I beg to move this amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" As there are some more amendments on this same subject it might save time if the movers spoke to them now."

His Excellency the President :—" Yes, because if the amendment is lost, I should have to rule them out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" I have a similar amendment which runs as follows :—

' That in the proviso to clause 6 the words from ' nor ' to the end of the proviso be deleted.'

" My reason for proposing this is that I think it is a little hard that the Advocate-General should not state his reasons for not granting a certificate. The accused will not know why the change is made."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I beg to move my amendment which runs as follows :—

" That in the proviso to clause 6 the words ' nor shall ' to the end of the proviso be deleted.' I have already said what I have to say on the point."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, I regret I cannot accept the amendment moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shukul. The clause in the Bill as drafted only says that the Advocate-General cannot be compelled to state the grounds of his application. There is no doubt that in ordinary cases he will be able to state them and indeed he will be most anxious to do so. There is very good reason why he should want to do so in order to convince the Court. In every case where he can he will do so. But there may be cases in which it will be impossible for the Advocate General to state the grounds. Such a case is conceivable. Suppose at the place where the trial is to be held the accused are actually preparing to murder a witness. In such a case it is not very desirable to disclose his knowledge of the conspiracy, and in that case he will merely grant the certificate. In the section of the Irish Act on which this is modelled the certificate of the Attorney General is conclusive. He has merely to state that in his opinion it is desirable that the place of trial should be changed, and it is changed because of that certificate. We have adopted the provisions of the English Act, but have made it more favourable to the accused and have given the Court discretion to make any order it thinks fit, but we are not going to compel the Advocate General, who corresponds to the Attorney General in Ireland, to state the grounds on which he gives his certificate."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" If the High Court is not in complete possession of the grounds on which the certificate has been given, how is it possible for the Court to form an independent opinion as to where the place of trial should be and inasmuch as the accused does not know the reasons why the usual place of trial as was specifically recommended has been altered he is precluded from challenging the propriety of their certificate strongly. Further, it may not be convenient for him to secure witnesses for his defence at the altered place, and he will, therefore, be put to grave inconvenience if the place is changed to the one recommended by the Advocate General, a fact which would be worth considering."

The motions were put and negatived.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; [13TH MARCH, 1919.]
Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I put my amendment which runs as follows :—

That the following be added to the proviso to clause 6 :—

' Where there is no Advocate General the Court may of its own motion or on being moved by either party and after hearing the accused when it acts of its own motion or on the application of the prosecution direct that the whole or any part of the trial shall be held at any place other than the usual place of sitting of the High Court. '

" My Lord, I put this amendment because there is an Advocate General only in Presidency Towns. The clause as drafted refers to the certificate of the Advocate General ; so that it presumes there is an Advocate General. This clause, as it stands, is no doubt drafted on the clause in the Irish Crimes Act, but in Ireland there is one Attorney General. In any case I don't see how provinces like the Central Provinces or the Punjab, for instance, are to be dealt with, and that is why I have provided in my amendment that the Court shall act on its own motion or on motion by either party. This completes the process that is indicated in the clause, and I trust the amendment will commend itself to the Hon'ble the Law Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Your Excellency, I regret I cannot see my way to support the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda. I think ample provision exists. The first part is wide enough. If he will look at it, he will see it says : ' The Court may sit for the whole or any part of a trial at such place or places in the province as it may consider desirable. '

" This makes it clear that there is no difficulty about the matter, and I hope therefore he will withdraw his amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" May I explain in the first place there is, as far as I know, no such officer as an Advocate General in Ireland, so it is unlikely we got the expression from the Irish Act. There is, however, an Attorney General and a Solicitor General. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel is quite right in his statement about this amendment and further, if the Hon'ble Mover will refer to section 4 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code he will see that in provinces in which there are no Advocates General, the term includes Government Advocate and persons appointed to carry out the duties of an Advocate General. The definitions in the Code apply to the Bill.

" I hope, therefore, that the Hon'ble Member will see that there is nothing in his amendment and that he will withdraw it. As a matter of fact there is in every province either an Advocate General or a Government Advocate. I assure the Hon'ble Member that there is nothing in his amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, there is, no doubt, some officer performing the functions of the Advocate General, and in some provinces, but as we shall see later, the Advocate General has certain functions to perform and which only exclusively belong to him."

The motion was put and negatived.

5 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move the following further proviso to clause 6 :—

' Provided further that —

- (a) if the trial or any part of it be transferred by the court as aforesaid on the application of the prosecution or on a certificate by the Advocate General, or on its own motion, the accused, if on bail, shall be entitled to his reasonable travelling or other expenses necessitated by such transfer. The Court shall have power in all cases to impose such terms as to cost and other matters as appears proper to the Court, when ordering such transfer ; and
- (b) the accused shall have the right of moving the Court to direct that the trial or any part of it be transferred in the same manner and the Court, after hearing the prosecution, may then pass such order as appears proper to it '.

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Sir James DuBoulay ; Sir William Vincent.]

" As regards the first part, I submit that if the case is transferred by the Court on the certificate of the Advocate-General and if the accused is on bail, all his reasonable travelling and other expenses should be paid. There was on this point another amendment by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde, but it was more ambitious as he wanted the expenses of the counsel also to be paid. I submit I restrict my suggestion to a small matter. My amendment is in accordance both with precedent and justice. If the case is transferred at the request of the prosecution, there is no reason why the accused should not be compensated and paid the expenses if he is on bail, and I say that the inherent power which the Courts possess of passing any orders regarding terms as to costs and other matters should not be fettered. Finally, I say that though the accused would have the right of asking that the trial of any part of the case should be held in some other place, I do not see why you should try to curtail the inherent power of the Court which it has of dealing with such applications."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—" My Lord, both these amendments have already been negatived in substance. In regard to the first of them the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde suggested in moving a previous amendment that the Court should order the expenses of the person charged, his witnesses and counsel to be paid by Government, and the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda in the present amendment has suggested a provision that the accused if on bail should be entitled to his travelling expenses if the trial be transferred. In this matter of expenses, Mr. Chanda says that he now restricts his suggestion to a small matter ; Government opposed the larger proposal and will now restrict its opposition to the smaller suggestion, but must still oppose. I don't think there is any reason for following the Irish Bill in this particular matter.

" As regards the question of the Court being moved by the accused, it has not been argued at any great length, but it does seem to me that the reasons for moving for these transfers are the general interests of justice. You will find that the explanation is given by the Rowlatt Committee, where they point out that witnesses brought to Calcutta or other great cities are exposed to great inconvenience and difficulties and labour under a sense of alarm and confusion in entirely novel surroundings. It is really from that point of view, the prevention of witnesses from being terrorised and in the interests of the administration of justice that this provision has been made : it is not in the interests of the accused persons but in the interest of justice. There is, therefore, no reason for permitting the accused to have the right of moving the Court in such matters and Government cannot accept the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I do not think I have anything more to add. I only want that the power of the Court should not be interfered with."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 6, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 7 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 8 as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move the following proviso to clause 8 :—

5-13 P.M.

' Provided that the accused shall have the right of cross-examining any prosecution witnesses if he so wishes before the framing of any charge without prejudice to his right of cross-examination after the framing of the charge.'

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Sir William Vincent ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

" I think, my Lord, this provision ought to be inserted. It is exactly in accordance with precedent, as both in trials of warrant cases and in commitment proceedings this power exists. But in practice it is very rarely resorted to by the accused. But it sometimes happens that questions put to a witness directly after his examination-in-chief may help the Court to find that there is really no reason to proceed further in the matter, and it results in the saving of time and public money. It also saves the accused from harassment and expenses.

" With regard to the remarks made by the Hon'ble the Home Member, I may inform the Council that I have known cases where a Magistrate refused to allow this right of cross-examining a witness at this stage, and the High Court strongly commented upon it. So when there is room for doubt, I think the point should be made clear, so I am strongly of the opinion that this provision should be inserted."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, the Hon'ble Member wishes to insert this amendment to the clause, although he thinks that the right which it provides will never be exercised

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" Very rarely."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" That the right will be exercised very rarely. Well, if that be so it does not seem worth while at all to insert the provision. As a matter of fact I take a rather different view. I believe that in all these cases the right of cross-examining witnesses before a charge is framed is always admitted when it is desired by the pleader for the defence, and this is certainly so in the provinces of Bengal and Bihar and Orissa with which I am familiar. The practice has always been so and it has been very definitely laid down by the Calcutta High Court. I will just quote one ruling here :

' Opportunity to cross-examine a witness for the prosecution should be given to the accused if they so desire even though the charge may not be framed.'

" There are other rulings exactly to the same effect, so that really the accused is given an ample opportunity of such cross-examination under the Criminal Procedure Code which applies to trials under the Bill.

" There is no necessity to make the change which the Hon'ble Member seeks to adopt. "

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" I am not quite sure that what the Hon'ble the Home Member says will be followed. You find cases reported in Calcutta in which the Magistrate refused to give the accused this right in this matter, and as we cannot be sure that it always will be done, I think it should be stated clearly. You are making a special procedure and I see no harm in making this point clear. "

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 8 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill, was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 9, as amended by the Select Committee, stand as part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" This is a small amendment, not so much to add to the law as to make it clear. It is that in clause 9, after the word 'necessary' the words 'for the attendance of defence witnesses or' be inserted before the words 'in the interests of justice.' It was pointed out to me that the words 'in the interests of justice' include the necessity for the attendance of witnesses, but sometimes I have seen that these witnesses are not allowed either because it would cause delay or for some other reason. So I submit that it should be stated clearly in the section that at least one or two opportunities will be given to the accused to secure the attendance of witnesses. If he cannot secure the attendance of his witnesses by two adjournments the court may proceed, and that is all that is intended by my amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, the Hon'ble Mr. Patel has also, I think, an amendment on the same clause. It might save time if he will speak to it."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I rise to support the amendment of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde. I have given notice of a somewhat similar amendment. It was no doubt pointed out to us in the Select Committee that the words 'in the interests of justice' would meet our objection. We however feel some doubt about it, and after all it is better to make clear by specified words that, if the court is of opinion that postponement is necessary to enable the accused to produce his witnesses, it should postpone the case. The words are 'The Court shall not be bound to adjourn any trial.' What we want is that the Court should be bound to adjourn if it is necessary to enable the accused to get his witnesses produced. I therefore support the amendment moved by my friend Mr. Khaparde."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, in the first place I wish to repeat in regard to this amendment that I think Members of this Council sometimes forget that trials under this Part will be before three High Court Judges. When the last amendment was discussed, we were told, 'Oh! cases have been known in which the cross-examination of witnesses has not been allowed before charge.'

"My Lord, these cases will not be tried before a Subordinate Magistrate, and I do not think that the Hon'ble Member could name any case or suggest any case in which a Judge of a High Court had refused a reasonable opportunity for adjournment for the purpose of calling defence witnesses. The fullest discretion is left to the court in the clause as it stands; the Bill merely says that the Court shall not be bound to adjourn save in the interests of justice or as provided in the preceding clause. Where a person deliberately, to defeat the ends of justice, either keeps his witnesses out of the way or puts in an enormously long list of witnesses, not bona fide with the intention of examining them, but merely to delay proceedings, in such cases it is right that the court should not be bound to adjourn. I think that a court of three High Court Judges would always adjourn if it was thought that there was any possibility of injustice to the accused."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Why then is this clause necessary?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I ask the Council to believe that three High Court Judges will behave in a reasonable manner and give an adjournment when it is required. The Hon'ble Member has asked me why this clause is necessary. It is necessary in view of the procedure prescribed by section 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It may be said that it is possibly unsafe to vest a similar discretion in the hands of subordinate courts, but it can be safely left in the hands of three High Court Judges."

His Excellency the President:—"Mr. Khaparde, do you wish to reply?"

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"No reply."
The motion was put and negatived.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent; Mr. V. J. Patel; The President.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

5-26 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, the amendment I beg to move is :—

" That to clause 9 the following be added :—

' The accused shall be entitled to get copies of the depositions and exhibits free of cost to prepare his line of defence.'

" This is a very small matter to the State, but it is of very great importance to the poor man who is on his trial. He will only have 14 days' time to get copies and prepare for his defence, and it may be that he may not be able to pay for the cost of these things in time, and this means extra cost. I submit that it will be a bare act of justice to let him have these copies free of cost."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I confess I can see no reason why an accused person who is being tried before this tribunal of three High Court Judges should be more favoured in the way of obtaining copies free of cost than any ordinary prisoner. My sympathies do not run so much with these men. They are in the same position as any ordinary accused persons and, if, I may say so, I know of no precedent for the amendment of the Hon'ble Member either in the Act of 1908 or anywhere else. Where accused persons—and the provisions of the Code are not illiberal in that respect—do get copies free of cost, the same facilities will be provided to persons accused under Part I, but I confess I can see no reason for showing them any special indulgence."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" I think there is a provision in the Code under which accused persons are sometimes allowed copies free.

" In regard to the first objection of the Hon'ble the Home Member that there is no special reason why these men should get copies free, I submit that there is a special reason. You are taking away from them rights which other persons possess, namely, the right of commitment, the right of trial by jury and the right of appeal, and I think it is only bare justice that they should get something for this."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My amendment was not proposed."

" That to clause 9, the following words be added :—

' or to enable the accused to secure the attendance of his witnesses.'

His Excellency the President :—" But it is exactly the same amendment as Mr. Khaparde's. I would ask the Hon'ble Member to compare the two. I must rule that they are both the same and that the one has been disposed of by the other."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move—

" That after clause 9 the following clause be inserted :—

' 9A. If there is any record of any previous statement or evidence or of substance thereof, of any prosecution witness made to any authority including the police, the accused shall be entitled to have copies of such evidence, statement or substance on applying for the same.'

" I must make a special appeal to the Hon'ble the Law Member to have sympathy with me in this matter, my Lord. Here you find that the man will have nothing to go upon in his trial. Of course, so far as the prosecution is concerned, before they call a witness, they must have got some information as to what he is going to say ; they must have some statement from him recorded either by a Magistrate or a police or some other officer. Is it not essential in the interests of justice that this fact should be known by the accused ? In an ordinary Sessions trial he has the statement of the man in the commitment proceedings, and if the man makes another statement he can compare the two and see if the man is telling the same story or a new one. But there is no chance now of his knowing anything at all. Is it, or is it not, necessary, in the interests of justice, that these facts should be known to the accused ? Therefore, my appeal to the Hon'ble the Law Member is that he should view this amendment sympathetically and allow the accused copies of statements in the possession of the Crown. Of course, if a statement is made before a Magistrate, the accused has a right absolutely to have it and he is entitled under sections 145 and 157 of the Evidence Act to cross-examine a witness on that statement. If the statement was to a police officer, the matter is slightly different. Before the present Code of Criminal Procedure was enacted in 1898, it was always allowed that statements recorded by the police should be given to accused persons. Then, my Lord, it came out that an Inspector-General of Police in Bengal, in order to evade this, issued a circular to the police to the effect that, when making investigations, they were not to record the statements of witnesses in the diary under section 161, but to incorporate them in the diary under section 172. The diary under section 172 being a privileged document, the accused person had no right to call for it or to inspect it, but it was ruled under the old Act that he had a right to get any statement to the police which had been recorded in the diary under section 161. It was tried to evade that by this circular to which I have referred and this coming to the notice of the High Court in a well known case, Mr. Justice Trevelyan ruled that if information given by any witness is incorporated by the police in the diary under section 172, the accused was entitled to that even then and he strongly censured the conduct of the police. He says : ' I can hardly believe that any responsible officer of Government would issue a circular like this to evade the rules of this Code.' (This is a case reported, I believe, in 20 Calcutta).

"After that the Code was amended and the law was amended on this point. The present law (section 162) is that if a man is called as a witness and if, as a matter of fact, he was examined by the police, then the accused person shall be entitled to ask the Court to send for that document and, after inspecting it, if the Court thinks fit in the interests of justice that a copy should be given to the accused, a copy was to be given. This is the present law, and, my Lord, when this law was enacted, there was considerable discussion in this Council about this point, and, with the leave of the Council, I should like to place this matter before it. This is what the Hon'ble the Law Member at that time, Sir Mackenzie Chalmers, said :—

'It is a question of discovery. When a witness is called, you are always entitled to impeach the credit of that witness by showing that on a previous occasion the witness made a statement inconsistent with what he is now saying in the witness-box. That is English law, and I believe it to be Indian law also. There is no question about that, but the point is this. In order to show that the witness on a previous occasion made a statement which was inconsistent with what he is saying now you must have some material to go upon, and there has been on the construction of the old section a conflict between the decisions of the Courts.'

"Then, later, he says :—

'We have only provided that in certain cases, and subject to the discretion of the Court, copies may be given of the supposed statements of a witness where the witness is himself called. It is clear that, when a witness is called, his name, identity and the substance of his information is to be given to the Court, and therefore there is no objection to any previous statement made by that witness being accessible to the accused . . . Very often in this country, and by no means rarely at Home, witnesses do make inconsistent statements at different times. They may make them from folly ; they may make them from bad motives ; but it is most important to the accused when he is being pressed by the evidence of a witness to be able to show that the story told by the witness in the box is not the story told by the witness when first he was asked about the affair when his memory was fresh and the facts were fresh in his recollection, and when he had no time to think out the consistent story which he afterwards tells. I can recollect several cases at Home in which I have been concerned where the inconsistent statements made by witnesses were most material evidence in favour of the accused. I remember one case where a woman was undoubtedly robbed and maltreated; there was no doubt of the fact. She first accused one man, and then she accused another, and I am by no means sure that either of the two persons she accused was the real person who assaulted her.'

"Then, my Lord, in reference to one remark of the Law Member, the then Lieutenant-Governor, Sir John Woodburn, put this question:—

'The Hon'ble Mr. Chalmers used the expression that he hoped that the discretion would be freely used by the Magistrates. I do not know exactly what he meant by that: whether he meant that they should not give copies of the papers or that they should freely do so.'

"Mr. Chalmers replied 'I meant that they should freely do so.' In a considerable portion of Bengal and the whole of Assam such statements are always given in Sessions trials, and whether the statements are recorded in full or the substance only is recorded, the Sessions Court always allows copies to be given to the accused. It is a matter of justice that this should be done. Under these circumstances, my Lord, I submit and I earnestly pray that the Hon'ble the Home Member will be pleased to accept this amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, where there are records of any previous statements or of evidence given against the prisoner by any prosecution witness, copies will be available to persons accused under this Part just as much as they are to any ordinary accused, and there is no reason for making any change. As to police papers, the position under the ordinary law is that where a witness is called for the prosecution and his statement has been taken down by the police, the court may, if it thinks expedient, give a copy of it to the accused when the statement may be used to impeach the credit of the witness. I submit that this is all that is required in the present case. The Hon'ble Member has told us that Judges always give these copies. Why should we suppose that three High Court Judges will not do so, unless it is in the public interest to refuse them? But in the case of these political conspiracies particularly, there are instances in which statements made to police officers cannot in the public interest or with due regard to the protection of the lives of those who make them be given; and it is in those cases only, I imagine, that copies of the statements of such witnesses will not be furnished to the accused. I cannot see why any difference should be made in the matter of furnishing copies of these statements made to the police between these young revolutionaries and any person accused before the ordinary courts."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I do not ask for any differentiation. What I say is that in the case of these revolutionaries the present law should be followed. If there is any matter that ought not to be furnished to the accused on political grounds, by all means keep that back; but I say so far as it implicates the accused, why should not the accused know what the previous statement of a witness against him was? In the court the witness may make a totally different statement, and, I submit, my Lord, that in a case like this it is very necessary that the accused should be given a copy of the previous statement."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 9 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 10, as amended by the Select Committee, do stand as part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 11 do stand part of the Bill."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Sir George Lowndes.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"My Lord, I ^{5-45 P.M.} beg to move the following amendment :—

'That in clause 11 the words 'its proceedings or' be omitted; and the following proviso be added to the same clause :—

'Provided that the Court is unanimous on the point.'

The clause would then run thus :—

'The Court, if it is of opinion that such a course is necessary in the public interest or for the protection of a witness, may prohibit or restrict in such way as it may direct the publication or disclosure of any part of its proceedings, provided that the court is unanimous on the point.'

"I do not propose to make a speech on this amendment. All that I ask is that, if it is thought necessary to keep any portion of the proceedings from the public, the opinion of the Court on this point should be unanimous."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I submit that if the court considers that the whole of the proceedings should be held in camera in the public interest or for the protection of any of the witnesses, they should have that power. It is very doubtful—I cannot put it higher—whether every court has not got that power at present. Many here will remember that the question was discussed at great length recently in the superior English courts. Nor is there any reason why in a matter of this kind, where the public interest or the safety of a witness are concerned, the opinion of the majority should not prevail, or why if one Judge thinks differently from two others, his opinion should have greater weight. I must certainly oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"My Lord, the reason why the opinion of one Judge should prevail if he is of opinion that the proceedings should not be in camera is that the Legislature and law courts have long recognised the advantages of a trial which is open to the public, where all that the court is doing can be watched by the public. If one of the Judges constituting a bench is not satisfied that there is any reason for shutting out the public from watching the proceedings, I submit that that is sufficient justification for requiring that the proceedings shall be public. My Lord, I fear that the Hon'ble the Home Member does not recognise the value of the safeguard of a public trial in the case of India and Indians to the same extent that he would do perhaps in the case of other countries. But the circumstances here are peculiar, and the remarks to which he referred—the remarks, I suppose, in the House of Lords, made on this subject—would apply with greater force to the circumstances obtaining in India. In this legislation before us you are adopting a very special procedure which considerably curtails the safeguards for liberty which the subjects of His Majesty at present enjoy. If you must do so—we urge that you should provide a safeguard against the exercise of the power except under circumstances where there shall be a guarantee at least to the mind of the person accused—that the matter has been properly considered by all the three Judges, and that they are unanimously of opinion that there is reason for the proceedings being in camera. Where one of the Judges is doubtful, I submit the matter stands on an entirely different basis, and the Council will be wise in requiring that where such is the case, the proceedings should not be conducted in camera and that the trial should be in open court

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I should like to point out that this clause of the Bill is not dealing with the question of trials in camera. The Hon'ble Pandit's remarks therefore are, I submit, beside the point."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"I should like, my Lord.

[Sir George Lowndes; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; The President; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Mr. V. J. Patel.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, I object to my Hon'ble friend replying; he has already spoken."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I only want an explanation, my Lord. I want an explanation of the section, if I may. I want to know whether my friend is right in what he has said. I want to draw the attention of Council.

His Excellency the President :—" No, no. The Hon'ble Member has already spoken once; he can make any personal explanation but nothing more than that."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" May I make my meaning clear? The language of this section is 'the Court may in certain circumstances prohibit or restrict in such way as it may direct the publication or disclosure of its proceedings or any part of its proceedings.' I should like the Hon'ble the Law Member to tell us whether that will not enable the Court to shut out people and members of the public from entering the hall or the room where the Court may be holding its trial."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, the last portion of the clause will include such a case. I think it can be construed as meaning that persons shall not be present at the time the trial is going on; otherwise it would be disclosing the proceedings. By using such words as 'disclosure of its proceedings' we clearly take away the right of the public being in court when the court may say that the trial shall be held in camera. I think it is a very dangerous power to give. It ought to be made clearer; I mean the last portion of the clause should be amended so as to make the sense clear; otherwise it will be construed that a trial may be held in camera."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 11 stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 12 as amended by the Select Committee do stand as part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" My motion is that 'clause 12' be deleted. My Lord, this clause introduces an innovation in the existing Criminal Procedure Code so far as this particular Bill is concerned. It provides for the examination of the accused as a witness. Under the existing law the court may ask the accused such questions as the Court may think fit and the accused is at liberty to answer them or not as he pleases. But under this section the court will explain to the accused that he is entitled to be examined as a witness, and if he agrees he will be examined as a witness, which means that he will be put on his oath, that he will be cross-examined and a minor point, he will take his place in the witness-box. My Lord, this I understand, is the law of England, and it is the law of the civilised world; but we must bear in mind that the conditions in India and the conditions in England are very different; furthermore when we have a perfect system of criminal procedure as you have in England there will be time enough to have an innovation of this kind engrafted on our criminal system. Apart from these general considerations it seems to me there are certain directly relevant facts which make it highly undesirable that this clause should have a place in the Bill. Unless at least one important provision is changed the accused will not be permitted to have the benefit, the assistance, of a pleader. Therefore the accused will be standing alone in the dock, the Court will put him questions and he will be left to his own unaided judgment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" The pleader is there, see Part I of the Bill."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [*Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ; Mr. V. J. Patel ;
Mr G. S. Khaparde.]*

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" Well be it so. I withdraw that part of the statement. It does not make any difference so far as my contention is concerned. Then he is placed in an unenviable position, he will be subjected to cross-examination and altogether the conditions are such as in the case of an ordinary person will make this position exceedingly unfavourable. It seems to me, my Lord, that this is a somewhat dangerous innovation. As regards this particular clause of the Bill the High Courts have not been consulted, no competent legal opinion has been obtained. I think before you introduce an innovation of this kind competent legal opinion ought to be consulted. Undoubtedly there were three High Court Judges on the Rowlett Commission, but not High Court Judges from Calcutta, authorities likely to be more conversant with actual conditions existing. It seems to me further that before you introduce a clause of this kind in this emergent measure it is important that local opinion should be obtained and the High Court consulted. Moreover there is another general observation I do desire to make in this connection, and it is this. This may be good law or bad law, I know nothing about it. If it is good law it should be introduced, but the fact that it has found a place in such a highly unpopular measure as this will handicap it later on in its introduction into the substantive law of the land. I understand there is a proposal to introduce this into our Code of Criminal Procedure. If you do so I feel confident that will be creating prejudice against that particular section so far as it forms part of the substantive law of the land. Having regard to the fact that it is an innovation, and that it is not supported by competent legal opinion I think it is most undesirable to introduce the section. The Bill is unpopular, this section will make it more unpopular. I do not think in the interests of justice it is necessary. Therefore I beg that this section be deleted."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I will only add a few words to the arguments of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjea. I understand that in the Act for the prevention of crimes in Ireland there is no such provision, I think I am right. If you are going to follow the procedure laid down there, there is no reason why this provision should be inserted in this particular instance. The question was thoroughly discussed in Select Committee, and if I remember it aright, most of the non-official members were against the change proposed to be introduced. I hope the Council will see its way to support this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" I have an amendment which by a strange coincidence is in almost the same words, namely, 'That clause 12 be deleted.' I find that this provision of the law has come out of 61 and 62 Vic. Chapter 26. It was introduced into England and now it has come into our system. When this Act was introduced into England the law did not apply to Ireland. If it was good law, why should it not apply to Ireland? I tried to look up Hansard's Debates on this point but got mixed up. I believe that the Irish members protested in a body. The Irish people are excitable and it requires a very strong-willed man to stand cross-examination, more especially when that cross-examination is conducted in the presence of three High Court Judges. Government is able to engage the ablest persons at the Bar. It has been found that many innocent persons spoil their own case; they tell the truth but they tell it in such a way as to prejudice the case against them. Then again it has to be remembered that education has not advanced in this country as far as it has in Ireland. Another thing is that the people are excitable, so that they may commit some act. In a book which I saw the other day on examination of the questions of identification a crime was committed and a witness was called; one witness said 'this man was not there' so the accused instead of staying quiet said 'Oh! thank God, there is one man that does not recognise me'. As Counsel explained this man was thanking God that there was one honest person who said that he was not there. A similar thing has happened in my own practice. The people with whom we have to deal are ignorant. Cross-examination is a very useful instrument, but it has to be in skilled hands, it is an instrument which is liable to be dangerous in wrong hands and to injure the person concerned. On the one hand the Government will have the ablest advocate at the Bar, whereas the man may not have any, unless he is treated as a pauper and the High Court thinks it necessary to provide him with one. I have come to the conclusion that this is a dangerous provision especially in a measure of this kind in which everything is being to a certain extent hurried. The charge against a man may, in these circumstances, be aggravated and he may commit some act or say something which he really never contemplated doing, and which may accordingly inculcate him. Therefore I say this provision should not find a place in this measure.

"So under these circumstances, I also move the same amendment that this provision should not find a place in an Emergency Act at any rate. These are the reasons why I put forward this amendment."

6 P.M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"My Lord, the provisions of clause 12 of the Bill are to my mind of such far-reaching consequence that they require to be very carefully considered by the Council. My Lord, on the one hand, it is perfectly true that the accused is not compelled by clause 12 to offer to go into the witness-box. To use the words of this clause 'the Court shall inform the accused that he is entitled, if he so desires, to give evidence on oath on his own behalf and shall at the same time inform him, if he does so, that he will be liable to cross-examination.' On the other hand, you have the important fact to bear in mind that if in the exercise of his option he refused to offer himself into the witness-box according to one part of the section, although it will not be open to the prosecution to make his abstention from the witness-box a subject of any comment, yet taking the clause as it stands there is nothing to prevent the court from coming to any conclusion that it likes having regard to the fact that he has abstained from going into the witness-box. My Lord, it is perfectly true that during recent years, it is perfectly true that some 20 or 23 years ago the English law on the subject was changed; but let us not forget that it was changed after centuries during which it was recognised as a fundamental principle of English jurisprudence that the accused cannot be shown into the witness box, that it is for the prosecution to make out its case against the accused. Now, my Lord, I do not think it would be right or fair to hold that the conditions in regard to this matter in this country are exactly parallel to those that obtained in England, say some 20 years ago or that obtain at the present moment. My Lord, my impression is that an attempt was made when the Irish Coercion Bill was introduced in Parliament to get a similar provision incorporated into that law and I speak from recollection, subject to correction by any member of the Council, that at that time the strongest possible objection was taken to provisions of this character in that Bill. It was probably, as my Hon'ble friend, Pandit Malaviya corrects me, and I think it really was in the year 1888. However, whether it was at that time or at any subsequent time, I am speaking only from memory, the fact remains that at that time the strongest possible opposition was shown by the lawyer members and not only by the lawyer members, but also by other members in Parliament to provisions of this character. Now, my Lord, it is perfectly true that in some cases the only evidence that the accused can give in his own defence is his own evidence, and it may be that the whole case of the prosecution may fall to the ground if the accused goes into the witness-box. The explanation that he may give in support of his own defence may be so convincing that the Court may be justified in discarding all the evidence of the prosecution. I am perfectly aware of that and I realise that it may have been in many cases that the accused may be let off solely upon his own evidence, but at the same time the risk is enormous; but surely it cannot be contended that there is not an equally great amount of risk of even a perfectly innocent accused spoiling his case and strengthening the case for the prosecution by going into the witness-box and submitting himself to such a cross-examination at the hands of a clever cross-examiner.

[Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

" My Lord, speaking as a lawyer, I must say that I have no strong prejudices one way or the other, but to be absolutely frank, I should not like an experiment of this character to be tried in a measure like this in the absence of important opinion which we should collect before we undertake to introduce a provision of this character in our law. My Lord, in the course of my speech yesterday, I said that the Bill should have been referred to the High Courts and to other Judges who have got to administer justice from day to day. My Lord, when it is borne in mind that an important provision like this is sought to be introduced in a measure of this character, I submit in all humility, the force of my remarks yesterday becomes quite apparent. We are entitled to know what is exactly the view which Judges of the High Courts in various parts of the country, which Sessions Judges, District Magistrates and other Magistrates and lawyers having considerable practice on the criminal side of the courts hold, what opinion these gentlemen hold in regard to a matter like this. We have got absolutely no evidence of that character. It may be that if you consult the High Court Judges and Sessions Judges and criminal lawyers, you may find your position infinitely stronger than it is now, but in the absence of any evidence to that effect, I certainly think that you are taking an extraordinary risk in trying an experiment of this sort. This question can be raised fairly and clearly when the revision of the Criminal Procedure Code comes to be considered ; it will be time enough then for us to consider the bearing of the English law upon Indian conditions. But at the present moment when you are introducing a special measure like this, I do not think that it is right that you should introduce a provision of such a far-reaching character. Therefore, my Lord, without, as a lawyer condemning it on legal principles or without as a lawyer supporting it on legal principles, I say the experiment is one which requires to be tried very carefully, and certainly, this is not the time when you can try an experiment of this character."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My Lord, I strongly support the amendment which has been moved by my Hon'ble friends Messrs. Banerjee, Patel and Khaparde. My Lord, I think it will be unwise, inexpedient and dangerous to introduce section 12. In the minute of dissent which I submitted to the Select Committee, I made my position with regard to this section so clear that I cannot do better than draw attention to what I said there. The first attempt that I know was made before the laws were reformed in England, and there used to be a provision that an accused person should not only have the option, but that he should be compelled, on penalty of physical suffering, to undergo cross-examination. That was regarded as a barbarous provision and was set aside, and for a long time, for some centuries as the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru has said, the law would not allow an accused person to be subjected to cross-examination or give him even the option of being examined on oath. In 1898, a Bill was introduced in Parliament which sought to introduce this change, namely, that an accused person may be examined on oath on his own application or at his own wish. There was opposition to the proposal, public opinion was strongly divided, and the Bill did not pass into law. The next attempt was made in 1898, and it was only then that the law was changed. Since that time an accused person in England is entitled to be examined on oath on his own application, and if he so offers to be examined on oath, then he is liable to be subjected to cross-examination. Now, my Lord, that is how the matter stands so far as England is concerned. Opinion was divided as to the utility and wisdom of this measure even in England ; but the experience of the last twenty years seems to have satisfied English Judges and lawyers that this was a wise provision to adopt, so far as accused persons in England were concerned.

" But, my Lord, for the purposes of the present discussion we have to remember that we here unfortunately are not yet in the position of England. We have to remember with regret that the system of the administration of justice which obtains in India is not yet what it should be. For thirty-five years and more educated Indians have urged one simple reform in the administration of justice, namely, the separation of the judicial and executive functions, and we have not been able to persuade the Government of India to carry out that very simple elementary reform. We have also not been able to persuade the Government of India to introduce a system of trial by jury all over the country and to let the opinions of the fellowmen of the accused have their due weight in influencing the decisions of Judges, in deciding questions affecting their lives and liberties. In other respects, too, the administration of justice in India does not stand on the same footing as it does in England. I think of all the institutions that Englishmen have reason to be proud, and they have got many such, the administration of justice among them is one of which they may well be very, very proud. We wish that we had the same system of justice introduced in India. When it has had its work for some time I do not think there will be a voice raised against a proposal to incorporate into our Criminal Procedure Code the provision of the law by which accused persons are now offered the opportunity of being examined on oath. But in order to consider this we should look at this question at this stage, and I would invite the attention of this Council to what was said on the subject in England in 1888 and even in 1898. I will first take the later period. In the discussions that took place in the House of Commons in April 1898, on the Bill to which my Hon'ble friend has referred, and which became 61 and 62 Vic. Chap 36. Speaking on the Bill, Mr. Lyttleton, M. P., said :—

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

'The very moment a man begins to cross-examine another an atmosphere of heat is generated. How many men can engage in an ordinary argument on an important subject without showing warmth? I think there are rather few in number. But what is cross-examination? It is argument conducted by men in public, with all the excitement that publicity can give. It is done by a man who is exhibiting his powers before others who may afterwards employ him; and is it not too sanguine to expect that such a man would conduct a cross-examination of a prisoner with that calmness and moderation with which English prosecutions are now conducted? May I give one quotation from the opinion of Lord Justice Collins, who has allowed me to use his name in this matter? My Hon'ble and learned friend has said that he did not believe that Judges would be carried away by the duties imposed on them by this Bill. Allow me to read the testimony of one of the Judges on this point, which I am sure will have great weight. There is no Judge on the bench more respected, esteemed and admired than Justice Collins. He says :—

'My chief objection to the proposed change is that I feel certain, it will greatly alter the present relations between the Judge and the prisoner. It seems to me inevitable that, if it should become the practice for the prisoner to give evidence in every case, the judge will in most cases have to put questions in the nature of cross-examination himself. He has to do so now very frequently in cases under the Criminal Law Amendment Act. Counsel who conduct ordinary cases are frequently inexperienced, and a crucial question often has to be put by the Judge

'If this becomes the ordinary practice, as I think it must, if the proposed change be made, it must shake the prisoner's confidence in the absolute impartiality of the Judge, which is so valuable a feature in our present system. It cannot but tend to alter the attitude of the Judge himself actually and apparently; and I should regard this as a great public mischief, and deprecate any change which might make it possible, unless I feel sure that the certain benefits would more than compensate.'

" Mr. Lyttleton went on to say :—

'This is the opinion of a Judge who has tried these cases himself, and who has no prejudice one way or the other. He has had great experience of both systems. Is it not a deplorable thing for the Government of this country that the Ministry should seek to alter one of the most impressive functions of Government which now exhibits the Judge and the prosecuting counsel—at any rate the Judge—not as the enemy, but as the friend of the poor and miserable? Would it not be a deplorable thing that a system so generous and humane should be so changed to one in which it would be the business and the duty of the Judge to put questions such as Lord Justice Collins suggests, and as the result of which he would not appear to the poor and miserable in a Criminal Court as a friend, as he is now generally regarded, but as an embittered enemy?'

"That was the view taken by sober, sensible men who spoke against the Bill. But the majority were for it and the change was introduced. Now, as I have said, experience has shown that in England the provision has worked well. But the circumstances of England and India are different. In order to judge of the suitability of the proposed law to India, I would rather invite comparison—I regret to do so, both for the sake of Ireland and India—with Ireland and draw attention to the opinions of the Irish Members.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Sir George Lowndes.]

“The controversy raged over the desirability or otherwise of the change for fifteen years before this provision found a place in the Statutes of England. The Irish Members as a body fought for fifteen years against the introduction of this provision in Ireland, and, my Lord, they eventually succeeded. It was because the discussions in the session of 1888 had shown that they were unanimously opposed to the introduction of this provision in Ireland, in the Bill which was introduced in 1898, and which became law, there was a distinct clause which stated that the Act should not extend to Ireland. The reasons which led Irish Members to oppose the extension of the change to Ireland were stated by Mr. Morley in the debate which took place in 1888. He said :—

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—“May I ask where the Hon'ble Pandit is quoting from ?”

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—“Hansard, Vol. CXXIV, pages 95, 96. Mr. Morley said :—

“There was no difference of opinion as to the utility of the measure. They were all agreed that to allow prisoners to become witnesses when they wished to do so would be a humane and beneficial change. But he could not agree that all the reasons which existed for the application of the Bill to England must necessarily exist in the case of Ireland also. The Hon'ble and learned Solicitor General said that there was no distinction between the cases.”

“Mr. Morley inquired if that was so why the Hon'ble gentleman was not prepared to extend the same laws to Ireland which were in existence in England ; why he was not prepared, for instance, to extend self-government to Ireland, and he went on to say :—

“The Hon'ble and learned gentleman had not dealt effectively with the argument of the Hon'ble and learned Member for North Longford (Mr. T. M. Healy) that the atmosphere of an Irish Court was not supposed by the people of Ireland to be favourable to the prisoner.”

“Unfortunately, my Lord, the same remark applies to the atmosphere of many a court in India. Mr. Morley went on :—

“The argument of the Hon'ble and learned Member for North Longford proved that there was all the difference in the world between the operation of a measure in Courts like the English Courts and its operation in Courts such as the Hon'ble and learned Member and his friends believed theirs to be. This was a Bill in favour of the prisoner ; but the Government were going to apply it in a country, where it would inevitably be regarded—whether rightly or wrongly—as being hostile to the prisoner. The effect of the measure upon Irish opinion would be the very opposite of that which was justly claimed for it in England. The Hon'ble and learned Member for Inverness (Mr. Finlay) had argued with great plausibility that the supposition that there was animus in the mind of a Judge against a prisoner was all the more convincing reason why they should give the prisoner the chance of exculpating himself by giving evidence. But it must not be forgotten that if the contention of the Hon'ble and learned Member for North Longford were correct, and if there was animus in the mind of an Irish Judge and a strong animus in the prosecuting counsel, the prisoner under this Bill would be exposed to the risk of a bitterly hostile cross-examination, and it will enforce on him a very serious disadvantage. It appeared to him (Mr. John Morley) the sheerest pedantry to insist that because this was a wise and desirable change in itself and in this country, they were, therefore, bound to force it upon Ireland against the wishes of her Representatives, and against the opinion of so staunch a partizan of the Government on the Opposition side as the Right Hon'ble and learned Member for Bury. The Right Hon'ble and learned Member for Bury was free from the suspicion of motive which attached to the Irish Members below the gangway and he had shown that he was strongly opposed to the change itself ; and on both these grounds his opinion was entitled to the greatest weight. Would the Government insist upon extending the legislation to Ireland against the wish of all the popular Representatives of that country, and against the opinion of a partizan of their own who was most competent to give an opinion upon that subject ? He wished to underline the argument of the Hon'ble and learned Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Milvain), which he was surprised the Government did not see the force of. They considered they were engaged on the difficult task of restoring law and order in Ireland. They said they had now got a state of opinion in Ireland much more favourable than it had long been to the maintenance of law and order and respect for the administration of the law. They must admit, therefore, that it was most undesirable politically to arouse fresh jealousy by introducing a single element of suspicion or irritation into the administration of the Criminal Law in Ireland at a moment like this; and yet they must equally admit that this would be the effect of the provision which, with deplorable tenacity, the Government insisted upon extending to Ireland.

That was said, my Lord, in 1888; substitute India for Ireland in the passage, and see how well it applies to the case we are considering

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" May I ask once again that the Hon'ble Pandit will give me the reference; volume 124 is in 1885 ? "

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" 1888, I gave the year."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I understood the Hon'ble Member to say volume 124."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Volume 324, pages 95 and 96.

" My Lord, other members expressed the same view that this legislation should not be forced upon Ireland, and the result was that the Bill fell through then, but when the Government introduced the Bill which became law in 1898, the Government themselves dropped the idea of extending its provisions to Ireland. This is our position. I submit that the proposal to introduce an important change like the one in question in this exceptional and drastic legislation is all the more unwise. If the change is a good one, you should wait and see that our courts are improved and that the administration of justice stands on a footing anything like what it stands in England. Let there be a greater feeling of confidence that the prisoner has all the constitutional safeguards of life and liberty provided secure to him and do not introduce such a change in a measure which is on the face of it admittedly, professedly going to curtail the constitutional rights and safeguards of life and liberty.

" My Lord, the basis for this legislation is to be found in the same Rowlatt Committee's Report to which we are indebted for the other important provisions of the proposed Bill. Let us see what the Rowlatt Committee have said on this point. They recognised that the introduction of this provision was an important departure; they also recognised that it was a departure which should not be introduced into the ordinary courts, and that it should not be introduced unless safeguards were provided against its abuse. This is what they said : ' No doubt only an experienced court should try cases under these conditions in order to make sure that an ignorant prisoner does not misunderstand his position and is not unfairly dealt with. This safeguard is ensured when the cases come before three Judges of the highest rank, and, upon the whole, we think the provision should be introduced. If it were a question of its general application we should, having regard to the above-mentioned considerations, be against it.'

" Now, my Lord, the Rowlatt Committee clearly stated that in their opinion this was not a provision to be introduced in ordinary circumstances. They would only agree to its introduction, as they say, when there would be all the safeguards provided against an ignorant prisoner misunderstanding his position and being unfairly dealt with. They thought that the provision of a Special Tribunal, consisting of three High Court Judges, supplied these safeguards. With due deference to the members of the Committee, I beg to differ from them.

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Mr. C. A. Kincaid.]

"The remarks to which I have drawn attention, the opposition which the Irish members waged for fifteen years against the introduction of a similar provision into Ireland, and their success in resisting its introduction into that country have a lesson for us. And in view of the existing state of things in this country, and of the fact that this is a very special and a very repressive piece of legislation in which it is sought to incorporate the provision in question, I beg your Excellency's Government to reconsider the situation and to decide to drop it. My Lord, I have acknowledged that the change has been beneficial in England. Yet let us not be in a hurry to introduce the most up-to-date improvements of only some departments of national existence in England, unless and until we introduce corresponding improvements in other departments of national existence and administration. Many such improvements are yet to come in particular in the administration of justice. Therefore until they come, until a feeling of greater confidence in that administration is developed and spread far and wide in the country, I hope the Government will see the unwisdom of enacting a provision like the one which is incorporated in section 12."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid :—"My Lord, I do not wish to waste the time of the Council unnecessarily, but this is a question on which I feel very deeply, and I also venture to hope that this Council will attach some little weight to the experience of one, who has been for 23 years a judge. Lovers of the 'Pickwick Papers'—and I hope that this includes the majority of this Council—will remember the trial of the suit which was brought against Mr. Pickwick for breach of promise. Now the first thing that strikes a lawyer about that case is that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant went into the witness-box. The next thing that strikes a lawyer is that had Mr. Pickwick gone into the witness-box and told the Court exactly what had happened, it is perfectly certain the jury would have believed him, and that he would have won his case. But he did not go into the witness-box and so he lost his case, and, as far as I remember, there was a verdict against him for £700. 6-27 P.M.

"There was an ancient and deeprooted objection in the Laws of England to parties in civil and criminal cases going into the witness-box. It was thought that perjury would result from this, and that there would be so much perjury that it would become a national calamity. The first breach that was made in this position was, I think, in 1838 when a law was introduced by which parties in a civil case could give evidence. However, it was still held that in criminal matters it would be very much better for an accused not to go into the witness-box. It would be impossible for him not to perjure himself. The next breach in this position was when the Criminal Law Amendment Act was introduced. This dealt with complaints made by women against men for sexual offences and it came to be generally understood that such offences were never likely to be committed in anybody else's presence, and that therefore it was necessary that an accused person should go into the witness-box in order to prove his innocence. This change proved a success and, finally, the whole position was carried by the Criminal Evidence Act of 1898, and now it is the law of England that if an accused person wants to do so he can give his view of the case to the jury.

"Well, my Lord, a good many quotations have been made from the debates on that Act by the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya. I have had the advantage of reading those debates, an advantage which, I regret, the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya has not enjoyed; and I think it is impossible for any one who reads those debates not to see that the weight of argument of those who supported the Bill was far superior to the weight of argument on the side of those who objected to it. The only person who really spoke with any force against it was Mr. Lyttleton from whose remarks the Hon'ble Member has read some quotations

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"My friend is not quite right. I have read several of the volumes and I have got some of them with me."

[Mr. C. A. Kincaid.]

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid :—"If I do the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya an injustice I apologise. At any rate, as far as I read the reports of the debate, it seemed to me that Mr. Lyttleton's speech against the Bill was the only one of any importance. On the other side, there was the great authority of Sir Edward Clarke and he quoted the opinions of Lord Halsbury, Lord Russell, Sir Henry Poland, Sir George Lewis, the greatest criminal experts of the time, and they all agreed that innocence was the one sure shield—that if a man was innocent and told the truth in the witness-box, he could baffle the most skilled cross-examiner. And Sir Edward Clarke ended that speech by saying: 'Why should you deny to an accused person on a capital charge the privilege of explaining exactly what happened, a privilege you accord to the merest scullery maid before dismissing her'.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya has, my Lord, said that that law has proved a success in England. I may mention that when I was appointed by the India Office some years ago to instruct the Solicitor General, Sir Rufus Isaacs, for the extradition of one Savarkar, to be tried in connection with the murder of Mr. Jackson, the argument made by Savarkar's counsel that told most with the Court of Criminal Appeal was that if Savarkar was tried in India he would not be allowed to go into the witness-box and tell the Judges his own version of the case on oath.

"My Lord, I will give another personal experience, if I may, to this Council. Some months later, I was going through a course of legal study and I went to one of the minor courts of London, and I remember quite well—indeed I shall never forget it all my life—the case of a boy there who was charged with having committed some theft. Witness after witness came up and swore that they had seen the boy there. He had no witnesses, but his Counsel put him into the witness-box, and I can assure this Council that, when he had left the witness-box, there was not one person present in Court who was not convinced of his innocence. He was not an educated man; he was simply an ignorant boy from the street; but, as Sir Edward Clarke said in the debate, his innocence proved a sure shield against the most skilful cross-examination.

"There is one great authority I will quote in this connection and that is the authority of Mr. Justice Hawkins. Mr. Justice Hawkins, in his 'Recollections' says 'At the time of these debates, I felt great misgivings as to the passing of this Act, but I should like to put it on record that I have never yet seen a case, where an innocent person went into the witness-box and gave evidence in his own behalf that it did not do his case the greatest possible good.'

"My Lord, I have mentioned the case where I myself went into a small London Court and saw an accused person go into the witness-box and be acquitted. I was so struck by that case that directly I was appointed Judicial Secretary on my return to India and from that time onwards I did all I could to urge the Bombay Government to alter the general Statute law; and I am glad to say the other day when the Government of India consulted the Bombay Government about alterations in the Criminal Procedure Code, the Government of Bombay on my advice and on the advice of some other senior judicial officers asked the Government of India to bring in a provision into the Criminal Procedure Code similar to that which has been embodied in this Bill. My Lord, only one question now remains, and that is the question of Ireland. The Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya asked why this provision could not be introduced in Ireland. Well, my Lord, I have read the debates of the Irish Members with the greatest possible attention, and I think the objection of the Irish Members was not to the principle involved. It was quite a different one. They urged before the House of Commons that they could not trust the administration of justice in Ireland. The one person whom they objected to was Mr. Peter O'Brien. He was either Counsel for the Treasury or Attorney-General for Ireland, I forget which; but when I was in Ireland as a boy there was not a man, woman or child that did not call that man 'Peter the Packer.' I do not know whether it was justified, but whenever an Irish Catholic went into the dock, Mr. Peter O'Brien managed to get a jury of twelve good men and true who were all Protestants and mostly from the North-West of Ireland. With this man's extraordinary success in getting together juries to his liking, an Irish Catholic was not likely to have a fair trial if he went into the dock. And that was the reason why the Irish Members objected to the introduction of this provision. It had nothing to do with the principle of the thing. It was due to the peculiar political atmosphere of Ireland. But no such prejudice exists in regard to the Judicial Department in India, especially the Judges of the High Court, who will constitute these special tribunals. The Hon'ble Dr. Sapru has spoken in the most flattering terms of the High Courts of India, and I think I may say that their impartiality and fairness are universally recognised."

[Mr. Kincaid ; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi ; Sir William Vincent ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ; The President ; Sir George Lowndes.]

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—

"My Lord, in order to enable some of us to express a definite opinion, I should like to know what exactly is the position of Government with regard to the amendment which four or five of us have proposed to the clause as amended by Select Committee, i.e., whether they are prepared to accept the amendment that the Court shall not draw an inference adverse to the accused by reason of his failure to give evidence on oath. It seems to me that that is a matter which is weighing on the minds of a large number of non-official Members. If we were in a position to know the definite position of Government in this matter, and whether they are going to accept the amendment that it shall not be open to the Court also to draw an inference adverse to the accused by reason of his omission to go into the witness-box, then possibly the position of affairs may be different. With your Excellency's permission I should like to ask the Hon'ble the Home Member to enlighten us with reference to this."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I am quite prepared to make a statement on this point. The Government of India propose to follow the English law absolutely."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"My Lord, may I suggest adjournment of the debate now, having regard to the fact that it is a most important matter and will need prolonged discussion."

• His Excellency the President:—"Well, Mr. Banerjea, I was going to inform the Council that I propose to sit until we finish with amendment No. 77. We are now at amendment No. 48, and for the convenience of Council I propose to adjourn at a quarter to eight and resume again at nine."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—

"My Lord, in view of the answer which has been given by the Hon'ble the Home Member to my question, I am compelled to say that with all my predilection in favour of the retention of this clause, that answer compels me to support the motion placed before the Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea. I do not think I need add to what has been said by other Hon'ble Members. The apprehension in the minds of most Hon'ble Members who are opposed to the retention of this clause is that although the clause provides that the counsel for the prosecution shall not comment on the conduct of the accused in not going into the witness-box there will be an unconscious bias in the mind of the Judge which may influence him against the accused by reason of the accused's conduct, and I submit that unless and until the safeguard that five of us have suggested, that such an inference shall not be open to the court to draw, we are not prepared to accept the retention of the clause."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, the reliance that has been placed by some Hon'ble Members on the reference to the opposition of Ireland would make it possible to deal with this motion very lightly, though I am far from desiring to do so. The Hon'ble Pandit referred to the diffidence felt by Irish Members on the subject. Another Hon'ble Member—I think it was Mr. Patel or Mr. Khaparde—asked "If it is a good law for England, why is it not a good law for Ireland?" I wish either of those Hon'ble Members could put that question to an Irish audience. I wish that the Hon'ble Pandit could do so, and he would see what reply he would get: I could almost laugh when I think what an Irish audience was in the years to which the Hon'ble Pandit refers, the years between 1882 and 1898,—believe me, I know much more what it was like than the Hon'ble Pandit can know. Those were the years when Ireland would accept nothing from the Government. Those were the years when the Irish Party looked at the hand that gave and not at the thing that was given. Any one who uses that as a serious argument against applying this provision to India, that the Nationalist Party would not have it for Ireland, shows a complete ignorance of Irish politics. The Council have heard my Hon'ble friend Mr. Kincaid, who is an Irishman. I am not an Irishman by birth, but I have some knowledge of what politics in Ireland were in those years, and I entirely endorse all that he said. The refusal of Ireland to accept it was for very definite political reasons and due to the opposition of the Irish Nationalist Party, who would accept nothing from the Government. But let us get away from the Irish argument and let us treat this thing not lightly but seriously. Now, what is the object of every rule of evidence? Is it not to get at truth? Not to get at the truth only when it is favourable to an accused person—not certainly to get at the truth only when it is favourable to the prosecution; but the object of every rule of evidence is to get at truth. Well that is what I want in supporting this clause. When I was addressing this Council on the introduction of the Bill, I said that legislation of this sort was a thing very distasteful to me, though in this particular instance I was satisfied with its necessity. That may incidentally be an answer to certain remarks that fell from my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah yesterday. But when I said that legislation of this sort was distasteful to me, I was making no reference whatever to clause 12 of this Bill, which has had my most earnest and sympathetic support throughout. I regret greatly to see India lagging behind the rest of the civilised world in this matter. I am not talking about Ireland, or about England only. Is it known to this Council that every self-governing Dominion—and remember it is the replica of a self-governing Dominion that Hon'ble Members are always asking to become—that every self-governing Dominion has this provision; that it is the law of most of the Crown Colonies, and the law of nearly every State of America? I need not refer to the French law. It is perfectly well known to all of us. The Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde suggested that the reason why it did not apply to Ireland was because the Irish are very excitable. Well, that applies at least equally to the French, and yet the system of examination of an accused person in France is far more drastic than it has ever been in England or in any part of our Colonies. Therefore what we are pressing on Members of this Council—I hope pressing on their reason—is the adoption of something which is practically the law of all the rest of the Empire, and with regard to which India alone is lagging behind. The proposal rests on this basis. It is no good for the Hon'ble Pandit to get up here and read extracts from Mr. Lyttleton's speech in 1898. That was 20 years ago.

[Sir George Lowndes; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

"He read, naturally enough, only from a speech of the opposition; he did not make any reference to the number of great speakers who spoke on the other side"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"I rise to a point of order, my Lord. The extracts I read from Mr. Morley's speech distinctly stated that he recognised the utility of the measure and I repeatedly said more than once that English lawyers dealing with the measures had said that it worked well. My Hon'ble friend need not be angry because I quote from authorities who are opposed to his views."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir George Lowndes; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, I am not angry ; I may have spoken with some warmth ; but all my life I have tried to put forward the two sides of a question fairly."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" So have I."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I say again the Hon'ble Pandit quoted from one important speech which was made on one side ; he has not quoted from any single one on the other ; and I tell him that there are volumes upon volumes of them so that he would have had plenty to choose from. I say it is not the very least good coming and reading to this Council extracts from an opinion which was given in 1898, not mentioning the opinions which were given on the other side when it is admitted by every lawyer in England now that this has proved to be a most salutary reform in the law of evidence"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My Lord, I must rise to a point of order. I leave it to your Lordship whether I have not made it clear in my speech that English lawyers had expressed opinions against the Bill, but that in the last 20 years their experience was that they were satisfied that the Bill had worked well. If I have, I would ask my Hon'ble friend to withdraw the remarks that he has made."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I did hear the Hon'ble Pandit make the remark, to which he has referred, but I have not suggested he did not make it. What I have said is that in view of the fact that 20 years' experience of the new law has shown that it works very well in England, we should adopt it here, and that is why I say the opinions which were recorded in favour of it then should also have been quoted to Council. Well it is admitted by the Hon'ble Pandit and by everybody, I believe, that the 1898 Bill which has become the law of England has been a very great addition to the jurisprudence of the country. What I was trying to do in support of my argument was to establish that proposition. I started by saying that the object of a law of evidence is to try and get at truth. As I pointed out nearly every other part of the Empire except India has got this law, and it is now fully recognised, I am glad to say even by the Hon'ble Pandit, that it is a good law, that is to say, that it is a law which does help to get to the truth ; and this, as I say again, is the one object of a law of evidence. It has been said that we have taken no—I forget what the exact words were—no competent legal advice, I think it was the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea who said this. Is that quite true ? We have got at all events so far as the general proposition goes some most competent legal opinions. We have the long debates in Parliament in 1898 when eminent lawyers declared that the measure would be a very valuable one ; we have got the fact that it has been adopted in almost every other part of the British Empire. We have got the advice of this very strong committee who have recommended it, a committee containing not only an English Judge but an Indian Chief Justice and an Indian Puisne Judge, and I believe a very eminent member of the Bengal bar. They have recommended it not hastily or unthinkingly but after careful consideration and weighing the merits and demerits of the case. They have said that if it were a case of applying this rule to all the subordinate courts in India they would be against the proposal ; but they say that having regard to the character of the tribunal before whom these trials will be held they have, as I read it, no hesitation in making this recommendation. Then it is suggested that it is a great pity to try the experiment only in such a tribunal as this. It is said that we should wait till we get it in as an ordinary amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code. Surely the argument, if I may say so, is all the other way. Here is an opportunity of trying the provision, of which Hon'ble Members seem so doubtful, with an extraordinarily strong tribunal. Surely that is the way you would try it first ; you minimise the risks. If the proposal were to apply it to the whole of India or make it a general law of evidence throughout India, having regard to the very different status of many local tribunals that have to deal with such questions, I quite agree that there would be a risk ; but here we have a unique opportunity of at all events trying the effect of a rule which the experience of 20 years in England has shown to be peculiarly good, before a tribunal of the highest possible position and character. There will be no tribunal equal to it in India. We have never before had an original tribunal of three high court judges dealing with questions of this sort. Therefore, I suggest to the Council that so far from it being wrong in principle to try the experiment here, it is the best possible opportunity of doing so, if it is an experiment, if it is still in the experimental stage at all, and surely twenty years' experience in England takes it out of the experimental stage or at all events that is what I suggest to the Council. I believe it is known to some Hon'ble Members that proposals have been circulated with regard to an amendment of this nature in the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill, and Local Governments and High Courts have had this matter under consideration. The Rowlatt Report too, as Hon'ble Members know, has been before the public, and been, if I may say so, very much in the public eye and the public mind. I think Mr. Banerjea told us yesterday, for eighteen months. I think that was a little bit of an exaggeration ; it was published a year ago or something like that. Therefore it has been before the public with its recommendations for nearly a year

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" May I rise to correct the statement which has just been made by my Hon'ble friend ? I said 18 months, but since the facts were pointed out to me I withdrew that statement, and I said that whether 18 months or 12 months did not in the slightest degree affect the argument which I had put forward, namely, that the circumstances had changed since the publication of the Rowlatt Report and therefore there was no justification for following entirely the recommendations of that report. The law must be suited to the circumstances. I think that represents it ? "

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" Exactly. I was only referring good humouredly to what my Hon'ble friend had said. The Report has been before the public for about a year, and it has been very much discussed in the public and I have not the very least doubt that eminent legal gentlemen, high court judges and practitioners, have been considering this clause very carefully. Then again, when it is said that no competent legal advice has been obtained, I look around this Council. Is there no competent legal opinion in this Council ? I can count a dozen lawyers here at all events. Then there is really very little more to say about it. The truth of the whole matter is that Hon'ble Members mistrust the proposal because it comes in this Rowlatt Bill. It is a case of 'Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.' It is not that my Hon'ble friends really have any real doubts of the value of this thing as a test of evidence ; they are content to refuse it because it comes in the Rowlatt Bill

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My friend is misrepresenting us here when he says we have no honest doubts about it. He is misrepresenting us. "

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" I have no doubt I am misrepresenting the Hon'ble Pandit ; I do not pretend to read his mind. I say it is purely a case of fearing the hand of the giver. You fear a gift that comes from the Government ; you fear it most because of its connection with the Rowlatt Bill. That is the real ground for it. Some at all events, I believe, in this Council are very recent converts to this distrust.

" I think I might have counted, if it had not come into the Rowlatt Committee's Report, on the support of a good many Hon'ble Members in this Council. Certainly, before the proposal was introduced into the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, several Hon'ble Members who are lawyers pressed it upon me very strongly and told me that it was absurd that India should lag behind in this respect. It would be a great advantage if we could look at this provision from the point of view of commonsense and reason. A man is charged with an offence, everybody can go into the witness-box and swear away his life, his honour and everything else. He is the one man whose mouth is shut, the one man who cannot give evidence. Are there not many cases where the only man can tell the court what really happened, is the man who is in the dock? Is it fair that you should deny him an opportunity of going into the witness-box and of telling you what happened? Yet this is what you are going to do in this Council

[Sir George Lowndes; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; The President.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"You refused to allow him

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble Member has spoken and must not interrupt."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"I rise to a point of order. I want my Hon'ble friend to say whether he accepts

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I object to the Hon'ble Member interrupting me. He has only a right to do so to make a personal explanation."

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble Member is entirely out of order in his remarks, and I must ask him not to make any more interruptions."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I was trying to say that it seems a little hard that all of you sitting round this Council, Indians and lawyers, should be deliberately denying to the man who is accused of an offence the right to go into the witness-box and declare his innocence. I am not compelling him to do so. I merely want to give him the right to give evidence. If this is to be rejected let it not be rejected by his own countrymen. But I wish that before it is too late Hon'ble Members will pause before they formally oppose this clause. Will you make it necessary for us by an official majority to carry this clause, will you deny every Indian if he is charged before a tribunal of this experience the right to go into the witness-box and give his own story of what happened? All I can say is, and I do so with all the earnestness at my command, that I hope Hon'ble Members will pause before they deliberately refuse this act of justice to an accused man. I have practised for many years in India, Hon'ble Members will concede that; I may have seldom prosecuted, but I have spent a considerable portion of my career in criminal sessions defending men of this country, and I believe that this is a provision of the law which we ought to have; that it is a provision which will enable truth to be attained and that where an innocent man is charged as he is charged in some cases, it will enable him to clear his character. Have my Hon'ble friends never heard the Latin Magna est veritas et praevalerebit. If a man is innocent and goes into the box, I fully agree with Mr. Kincaid that truth will prevail. But you are denying him, you are refusing him the right to tell his Judges what really happened."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"May I make a statement?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I think this is the sixth time the Hon'ble Member has attempted to speak. Our one object is to get the truth, and I think that all in this Council will believe that this is the only object that I have in view. I doubt if any one believes that my object in pressing this is to get an innocent man convicted. I do not believe at all events that there is any one in this Council who thinks so. If there is, let him get up and say it. To give an innocent man this opportunity will be an enormous advantage to him and one to which, I believe, every lawyer in this Council will concede his right. I have no hesitation in affirming my conviction that this provision will be a great improvement in the law so far as it will help us to get at the truth in criminal cases."

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri; Khan Bahadur Mian Muham- [13TH MARCH, 1919.]
mad Shafi; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

7 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—"We have heard a most interesting and lively discussion and may I add that it has been to me of the utmost profit and instruction. I wrote a dissenting minute in which I opposed clause 12. I have heard sufficient now which makes me think that perhaps I had better have supported clause 12. It is not usual for speeches to make converts in Council; we come here with our minds more or less made up, but having come into this Council with intent to do the accused in these cases all the justice possible, it occurs to me that the rule need not be followed in this instance. I am prepared, your Excellency, to change my mind. I do so with conviction and I will vote in favour of the retention of clause 12. I may say this that I have travelled in this matter in a direction contrary to that in which my Hon'ble friend and colleague Mr. Shafi has travelled. Mr. Shafi and I wrote dissenting minutes. Mr. Shafi would have clause 12, but after listening to the speech which we have just heard I go to the other side. . . .

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammed Shafi :—"My Lord, may I say that my learned friend is not entitled to make any such assumption. So far as clause 12 is concerned my position is the same as in Select Committee. By reason of the answer given by the Hon'ble the Home Member I said I could no longer support it."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—"My Lord, I am very glad to find myself in the excellent and encouraging company of the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi in this matter. It is a pity that the Hon'ble the Home Member has been unable to accede to our request in respect of the other change we propose. However I have heard sufficient, as I said, to make me a convert to the theory that perhaps when a man is really innocent he had best be allowed to go into the witness-box in his own behalf."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—"My Lord, I am sorry I am not able to follow my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sastri. I fear I am too old to be converted to new ways after having formed my conclusions upon the information placed at my disposal. I still think that the provision is a dangerous innovation, at any rate, it is a provision which has to be carefully thought out, in regard to which we ought to have more information than is at our disposal. My Lord, at the present moment I had in mind a name that I am not permitted to disclose. I had an opportunity of discussing this matter with him. He is a distinguished lawyer, I need not say more because I cannot disclose his personality, and as the result of that discussion, we both came to the conclusion that in the present circumstances of the country such a law would not be instrumental in eliciting the truth. I am entirely at one with the Hon'ble the Law Member that we ought to get at the truth, but our apprehension is that having regard to the class of prisoners in such cases the section would not help the elucidation of the truth. They would break down under the stress of cross-examination. They would not be able to tell the truth, in some cases they may but in most cases my fear is that they would not stand the stress of examination, and you may receive impressions which would be the reverse of it. It is this apprehension which fills the mind of our friends over here, and I venture to think that the general sense of the educated community would be one of suspicion and mistrust. My Hon'ble friend has referred to the attitude of suspicion and mistrust with which we approach the Rowlatt Committee's Report. This is absolutely true. We do approach that Report in an attitude of suspicion. That colours our views with regard to it. Can you seriously say that it should not be so having regard to the character of the recommendations, the drastic recommendations, the curtailment of personal rights which the Report recommends? Thus there is that attitude of suspicion and distrust, and, my Lord, it is because of this fact that I ventured yesterday to ask, to beg, to entreat your Lordship's Government to postpone the consideration of this Bill for a few months so that the public mind might be reduced to a more rational frame and we might be in a position to consider the whole case in an atmosphere free from prejudice which would be a waning prejudice as time went on. We do not think that the examination of the accused would be instrumental in eliciting the truth. And, my Lord, if that is the public sense, and if that feeling is repeated in the newspapers, in the great organs of public opinion, if that is voiced in this Council, I put it to your Excellency to say whether we ought not to respect that feeling. Here you are introducing an innovation, I will say with the best of motives, I do not for one moment question the intentions of the framers of that section. You have done it with the best of motives, but you are generous enough, I do hope and trust, to allow others to think differently from you, and permit honest differences of opinion between yourselves and those who may be your critics. We are afraid of the innovation, we think it is dangerous. We are of opinion that it would not elicit the truth. I will not refer to the Irish controversy, but that is the sentiment, the deliberate sentiment, of my educated countrymen, and with the exception of Mr. Sastri, no one here has given expression to any view other than that which I have put forward. Lawyers like Dr. Sapru have expressed their apprehensions; another lawyer like my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi is of the same opinion, and if Mr. Jinnah would speak, I do not know what he would have to say, and I take his silence as evidence that I have rightly interpreted his views. However it may be, here we have got lawyers in this Council Chamber, other men who are not lawyers, they are all Indians, of the same mind, of the same view, that this is a dangerous provision, and therefore we are right in pressing upon your Excellency's Government, despite my friend's conversion, to drop this provision of the Bill. The Bill is already unpopular. Do not make it more so by having a provision of this kind against practically the unanimous sentiment of our educated countrymen."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea]

The motion was put and the Council divided as follows :—

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Sir William Vincent ; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi ; The President.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

7-14 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I beg to move that for sub-clause (3) of clause 12 the following sub-clause be substituted :—

'(3) No inference adverse to the accused shall be drawn from his failure to give evidence on oath.'

"My Lord, I am aware that the clause as drafted is from the English Statute, but nevertheless I would respectfully urge that it should be amended on the lines I have suggested. The Hon'ble the Home Member has declared in emphatic terms

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"May I explain that that was my personal view, and that I may have to defer my personal opinion to the views of others."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—"My Lord, that is most unfair to me ; I was prepared to support the clause but for the reply to my question given by the Hon'ble Member and now he goes back on that."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I am thankful for the ray of hope that is given by the Hon'ble the Home Member's words. I do hope that the Government will be pleased to reconsider the matter and accept this very small amendment. If in the Hon'ble Home Member's personal view he forms this judgment, I need not detain the Council at this late hour with any more words, and I move this amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, as I said just now, I am afraid in an unwitting moment I expressed my own opinion on this matter, perhaps too readily, but it is obviously one's duty in these matters to defer sometimes to the opinions of others, and, in these circumstances, it is my duty to accept this amendment."

His Excellency the President :—"There are four or five amendments here in different words but implying more or less the same thing. I think it may be convenient if we were to leave this particular amendment over until we meet again at 9 o'clock, by which time the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill will have made up his mind as to the form he would prefer."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, it is scarcely for the Member in charge to make up his mind as to the form of words at a moment's notice."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I thank the Hon'ble Member for this kind concession for which I am most grateful, small as it is."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—"My Lord, I desire to offer my sincere congratulations to your Excellency's Government on the compromise which has been arrived at, a compromise satisfactory, I think.

His Excellency the President :—"Is that a personal explanation ?"

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—"No, but perhaps your Excellency will allow me to say something about this amendment as a very similar amendment stands in my name, and I wanted to say a few words in support of it. Is it your Excellency's pleasure that that should be taken later on ?"

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[The President ; Sir George Lowndes ; Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

His Excellency the President :—“ I think it would be more convenient if numbers 51, 52, 53 and 54 were to stand over until we resume at 9 o'clock and if that form of words could be settled.”

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—“ I suggest that it is not necessary to accept a form of words. Hon'ble Members always wish that amendments should be put into shape by us, and therefore if we accept the spirit of the amendment, my Department will put it into shape before the Bill comes up again. ”

His Excellency the President :—“ That is the usual practice ; perhaps that would meet the Hon'ble Member.”

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—“ May I know what the Hon'ble Member means by ‘ before the Bill comes up again ’ ? ”

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—“ What ordinarily happens is that we have an adjournment in a long Bill after the Select Committee's Report has been considered, and then it comes up to be passed when the amendments have been put into shape. That is the usual practice, but I have no doubt we can deal with this particular one at 9 o'clock if Mr. Shafi wishes it. ”

The motion that the principle of the amendment be accepted was put and agreed to.

His Excellency the President :—“ Mr. Patel's[†] amendment and Mr. Shafi's[†] and Mr. Shukul's[‡] too, are covered by Mr. Chanda's. ”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—“ My Lord, I beg to move that in sub-clause (b) (ii) of clause 12 (4) the words from ‘ or the nature or the conduct of ’ to the words ‘ the prosecution or ’ be deleted. The words are ‘ or the nature or the conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the witnesses for the prosecution. Omitting them clause (b) would enact that an accused person, when he is in the witness-box, shall not be asked several questions, including whether he has a bad character, unless :—

‘ (i) proof that he has committed or been convicted of such other offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence with which he is then charged, or

(ii) witnesses for the prosecution have been cross-examined with a view to establish his own good character, or he has given evidence of his good character. ’

“ Your Excellency, ordinarily an accused person can adduce evidence of good character; then if he does adduce evidence of good character, of course evidence to the contrary may be adduced. All this is provided for in clauses (i) and (ii). What I am asking the Council to delete is the restrictive words qualifying the exemption provided for in clause (b) against the cross-examination of the accused about his bad character. That exemption should not be dependent upon a determination of the nature or the conduct of the defence. It would lead to very elaborate discussion as to whether the conduct of the defence is correct or incorrect, and whether the nature of the defence is such as justly to provoke this reprisal. Possibly the judge would be called upon at an early stage to state whether imputations are cast

* That to sub-clause (3) of clause 12, the words ‘ or of any inference by the Court ’ be added ’.

† That to sub-clause (3) of clause 12, the following be added :—

‘ nor shall the Court draw any inference adverse to the accused from such failure. ’

‡ That to clause 12 (3) the following be added :—

‘ nor shall the Court draw any inference adverse to the person charged from such failure ’.

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Sir George Lowndes ; [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

upon the character of the prosecution witnesses by reason of the nature of the defence. It would be undesirable that the Court should, before the conclusion of the trial, be asked to express an opinion as to whether the conduct of the defence is such as to expose the accused to this penalty of being cross-examined about character.

"I submit nothing would be lost if these words be omitted. Of course in the ordinary course of the trial the accused would put questions to the prosecution witnesses to shake their credit by affecting their character. That is a privilege which the Evidence Act provides for now, and every accused person must try to show that the prosecution witnesses are unworthy of credit. I think, my Lord, we need not go so far as to bring in this question of the nature of the conduct of the defence as determining the exemption or non-exemption of the accused from certain privileges. I hope that the last words may be deleted and that the trial should proceed in the manner provided for elsewhere, especially having regard to the fact that we are introducing a new section."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"My Lord, there seems no object in this amendment. We have followed the English Act throughout, except where we have been heavily pressed this evening to make a concession which has recently been made by my Hon'ble friend of the Home Department. Otherwise we have followed the English Act all through, except that we have left out the words 'so as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution.' We have left out the words 'imputations on the character of the prosecutor,' because, of course, in all these cases before the Special Tribunal the prosecutor will be Government, whereas the English Act applies also to private prosecutions. We have followed the English Act and there seems no reason for going back on it. They have had 20 years' experience of this new addition and have found that it is a desirable one. Once we begin to tinker with it, even with the wisdom of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to help us, we do not know where we are and we lose all the benefits of the English precedent.

"Then, as to the merits generally, it is perfectly obvious that if the defence makes aspersions on the witnesses for the prosecution, it is only fair that some retort should be made to them. If I may use a homely illustration, which, no doubt, will appeal to my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma in view of a recent discussion, what is 'sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander'."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 12 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended stand part of the Bill, was put and agreed to.

7-2 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that clause 13 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that clause 14 stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—"My Lord, I beg to move the following amendment :—

'That for clause 14 the following clause be substituted :—

'14. The accused shall be acquitted unless all the Judges constituting the Court concur in convicting him'.

"My Lord, the amendment which I beg to move is not based on merely sentimental grounds. It is based upon the fundamental principle of British justice, a principle which has a long and sacred tradition behind it and which we all respect and value so highly. That principle, my Lord, is that the benefit of doubt shall be given to the accused. It is an established principle of the criminal jurisprudence that 99 guilty persons shall be let off but that not one innocent man shall be punished. Such is the great and sacred regard which the British Legislature has always attached to the freedom of the lives and liberties of the people. The Indian Legislature has also acted upon the same principle in the matter of the administration of the criminal law in this country, and this is the first time in the history of criminal legislation in India, except measures designed to meet the exigencies of war times, that a departure is sought to be made.

" My Lord, while moving various amendments to the Bill, and while speaking on the principle of the Bill, when it was introduced, we have endeavoured to make it quite clear how under the provisions of this Bill even an innocent man is likely to be hauled up. The administration of the Defence of India Act in the past has confirmed this view. The case of the Sindhubalas in Bengal and similar flagrant instances show the way in which laws of repressive nature are apt to be abused, and there can hardly be any guarantee to the effect that such abuse will not be repeated in future. As a concrete instance of this, with your Excellency's permission, I beg to quote the case of King-Emperor versus Narain Rao Vaidya tried and decided lately in the Central Provinces . . .

His Excellency the President:—" Will the Hon'ble Member indicate to me how what he is saying comes under the amendment which he is moving."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—" I am just trying to point out that the benefit of doubt should be given to an accused, and a difference of opinion amongst Judges indicates doubt. That is what I am driving at, and I am going to give an illustration of the fact how this law is apt to be abused at times and innocent men hauled up and why an adequate safeguard is necessary."

His Excellency the President:—" Proceed."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—" Narain Rao Vaidya was charged with an offence punishable under rule 23 read with rule 29 of the Defence of India Act Consolidation Rules, 1915. The case was instituted and tried in the Court of the District Magistrate, Criminal Case No. 14 of 1918, and resulted in conviction. As a result of the same Mr. Vaidya had to undergo imprisonment and rot in jail for very nearly three months, and he was only released when the case went up to the Judicial Commissioner's Court and justice was at last done and he was released by Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, the Judicial Commissioner. The charge was to this effect:—

' I, Syed Zahir Ali, District Magistrate, hereby charge you Narain Kashinath Vaidya, as follows:—First—that you on or about the 8th day of June, 1918, at Damoh in the course of a speech delivered by you made a statement to the following effect:—

- (1) Does anybody consult you when settlement is being done as to how you maintain yourself, and your circumstances, and how much you spend and how many dependents you have, and what rent ought to be assessed? Without any inquiry rent is assessed according to their sweet will, and the Tahsildar is deputed to make realisations. What is being done? The stream of money flows to England. War Loan is being demanded. There is no money. So where is it to come from? India is something like a sugarcane tree. The juice is extracted but the roots should be left alone. If the root is also gone then how can we enjoy the cane? If the root is eaten up then you are also gone and we are also gone.'

" This was the first item of the charge . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" May I rise to a point of order in this matter? As I understand from the Hon'ble Member, and my recollection corroborates his statement, this was not a trial under the Defence of India Rules at all, that is, before any court constituted under those Rules, but a trial before the District Magistrate under the Criminal Procedure Code. There was an appeal and the man was acquitted. It really seems to me to have no relevance to the point which is now under consideration."

His Excellency the President :—" I should like the Hon'ble Member to point out how all this is relevant to the amendment he is moving. I thought he was going to build up his argument on it, but I see now he is going off on another tack."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" I wanted simply to point out that at times innocent men make innocent speeches—of course they may be severe and harsh speeches—and yet a charge is framed against them stating that that is an attempt to overthrow the British Government; and that is what had actually happened in the case I am quoting . . .

His Excellency the President :—" That has nothing to do with the amendment you are moving."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" Very well, my Lord, I shall proceed without it."

His Excellency the President :—" Give us another illustration."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" My Lord, last year when my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea moved a Resolution on the Indian Defence Act, the Hon'ble the Home Member was pleased to admit that mistakes had been committed in the past and widespread alarm . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I again rise to a point of order. That was in connection with advisory committees for internees and had nothing whatever to do with the question of trial at the King's pleasure."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" But what I beg to point out is that these laws are liable at times to be abused, and this is a fact which, I submit, cannot be denied. There have already been numerous complaints in the past that the emergency powers given by the Act upon which this Bill is based were being used with uncompromising rigour and often with little discrimination, and the Bill has naturally given rise to a general feeling in the country that the attitude of Government . . .

His Excellency the President :—" If you were discussing the principle of the Bill you would be quite ad rem in referring to these matters, but you are now speaking to the amendment you have put before Council, and really I must draw your attention again to the fact and ask you to confine yourself to the amendment you are moving."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" Well, my Lord, as I just now indicated, whenever there is a difference of opinion among the Judges, the established principle of the British law and justice is that the benefit of the doubt must be given to the accused. I submit, my Lord, that this principle should be adopted in this case as well, and as a proof of this and as an authority for this, I beg to point out that in the Prevention of Crimes Act, Ireland, 1882, 45 and 46 Victoria, Chapter 25, there is a provision to this effect :—

' A person tried by a Special Commission court shall be acquitted unless the whole court concur in his conviction, and the judges of the said court shall in all cases of conviction give in open court the reasons for such conviction.'

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ; The President ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"Now that is the provision there and I beg to submit that a provision similar to that may be embodied in the Bill in substitution of the one that exists in the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" My Lord, I have got a similar amendment * to move."

His Excellency the President :—" I don't wish to force you to speak."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" I have just half a dozen words to say, my Lord, in this matter. When there is a difference of opinion between Judges trying an accused person, the fact indicates that there is at least some element of doubt. Two judges are on one side, the third on the other side. The very fact shows that, with regard to the guilt of the accused, there is some doubt; and if there is such a doubt, the accused surely should get the benefit of that, and that is the principle upon which my amendment is based. Let me call your Lordship's attention to one particular case which occurs to my mind in Bengal. It was under the Defence of India Act and therefore relevant to the particular matter which we are discussing. There were three judges and a young man was tried, I think, Krishnagar or Khustia was the place of trial, which is a sub-division of Krishnagar. Now there was a difference of opinion among the Judges. The plea that was set up was a plea of alibi. The young man came from a highly respectable family. Respectable witnesses deposed to the fact of the alibi. The non-official Judge accepted the plea. The official Judges did not, and there was a difference of opinion. Great excitement prevailed, articles in newspapers and so on. The matter went up before the Government of Bengal, and the Government in its executive capacity was called upon to determine whether this unfortunate young man had been rightly convicted or not. The Government upheld the verdict of the majority.

"Well, my Lord, cases of that kind ought to be avoided, and it does seem to me that it is a right principle and is attended in its practical application with no inconvenience that no man shall be convicted except on the unanimous verdict of all the Judges. And, my Lord, I understand that is also the Irish law. That is a provision of the Irish Criminal law, and I do hope that my Hon'ble friend the Home Member will see his way to accept this amendment. It is a reasonable amendment; but I do not find that he accepts everything that is reasonable."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I have a similar amendment † and I support it."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I have a similar amendment ‡ on the agenda, and I support it. The amendment is all the more necessary in view of the fact that there is no right of appeal to the man and the trial is not by jury. In the Irish Act referred to by my Hon'ble friend the Mover of this amendment, you have at any rate the right of appeal, and yet it has been further provided that the verdict must be unanimous for conviction. Here there is no right of appeal. I therefore think that, unless the Judges are unanimous, the benefit of the doubt, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea put it, must be given to the accused."

* That for clause 14 the following clause be substituted :—

' 14. The accused shall not be convicted except on the unanimous opinion of the Judges constituting the Court '.

† That for clause 14 the following be substituted :—

' 14. The accused shall be acquitted if the Court is not unanimous in finding him guilty '.

‡ That in clause 14 for the words ' the opinion of the majority shall prevail ' the words ' the accused shall be acquitted ' be substituted.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; The President ; [13TH MARCH, 1919.]
Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My Lord, I strongly support this amendment. Reference has been made several times to the Irish Act, and, I think, rightly. I beg to point out that under the Irish Act also the special court was to consist of three High Court Judges, and yet there was also an appeal provided. I would draw attention to a portion of the speech of Sir William Harcourt, who introduced the Bill, in order to show how strongly anxious they in England were to see that injustice should not be done."

His Excellency the President :—" Will it be long, because I propose to adjourn at a quarter to eight ?"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I will finish, my Lord, before that."

His Excellency the President :—" Of course I am willing to let the Hon'ble Pandit continue his speech later, if he likes."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Thank you, my Lord. But I will finish shortly. Sir William Harcourt said :—

'The court will sit without a jury. They will decide the questions both of law and of fact, and their judgment shall be unanimous. Well, then, in order to give every security and confidence to this tribunal, we give in all these cases an appeal to the Court of Criminal Cases Reserved. I believe that is what it is called in Ireland. At all events, it is a body consisting of the residue of the Judges of the Supreme Court. I believe that the ordinary quorum of that Court is five Judges, and upon the appeal the judgment will be by a majority of the Court, so that you will see that no man' and it is this to which I beg to invite your Excellency's attention and the attention of the whole Council 'so that you will see that no man can be convicted, under these circumstances, without the assent of six Judges—three in the court below and three in the court above.'

"I submit, my Lord, that this lends strong support to the proposal that where there is no unanimity of opinion among the three Judges of the Court, the accused should have the benefit of the doubt, and I hope the Government will see their way to accept the amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I am sorry to be accused of being unreasonable by my friend, Mr. Banerjee. I thought we had met him throughout in a spirit of sweet reason during the course of this debate. There is another thing that I am sorry for and that is that in an unlucky moment in the course of the debate I mentioned the Irish Coercion Act, as I believe that by doing so I laid the foundation of a great deal of trouble. I think many Hon'ble Members would not have brought the Act up at all if I had not in a moment of weakness mentioned it. . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I rise to a point of order. It is a quarter to eight, your Excellency."

His Excellency the President :—" I think if we can get rid of Sir William Vincent it would be better."

7-45 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I put it to the Council that though in the Irish Coercion Act they do have a unanimous verdict of the judges, there this verdict is in substitution of a unanimous verdict of the jury, whereas in many parts of this country these offences are not triable by jury at all, and even where they are triable by jury we do not require in any case a unanimous verdict. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde said, quite correctly, just now that in the High Courts a verdict of 6 out of 9 is accepted and in other courts where jury trials obtain, the verdict of the majority is accepted ; and generally speaking we do not follow the system of always requiring a unanimous verdict. We accept a majority verdict or decision. This was the case not only under the Defence of India Act, but also under the Act of 1908, and I cannot remember any case of injustice under that Act. I myself do not see why the opinion of one judge possibly on a point of law should prevail over two judges, or why a person who is accused of a revolutionary crime and is put before three judges, the very best tribunal we can give him, why he should be better off than an ordinary criminal. In the case of a difference of opinion between judges in the case of an ordinary criminal the opinion of the majority prevails even if it is a death sentence. At the same time I am quite sure that Members of this Council will admit that where any one Member of a tribunal under this Act was in favour of acquitting a person, his opinion would necessarily—any judicial officer who has ever done judicial work will bear me out—carry the greatest weight with the other two judges who are sitting with him. Whenever there is any question of this kind, the tendency of the court is always to go with the judge in favour of the acquittal, and it is only in the very strongest cases that a contrary view is taken. My Lord, the two cases by the Hon'ble Mr. Shukul really have no kind of connection with the amendment under consideration. I hope that Hon'ble Members will not allow their minds to be prejudiced by them; one was the case of Sindhubala. I think Hon'ble Members of this Council are well aware . . .

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir William Vincent ; The President ; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

His Excellency the President :—" I think I checked the Hon'ble Member when referring to these cases."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" Well, then, my Lord, I will not refer to them and will content myself with saying that for the reasons already given, namely, that the procedure under the Bill is in consonance with the practice in India and with the previous law on the subject, I regret I am entirely unable to accept this amendment."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" My Lord, I shall say only a few words . . .

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I shortened my speech, my Lord, on the understanding that we would adjourn at this time. I hope I shall have an opportunity again."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" It will take some time, anyhow I am going to ask for a division."

His Excellency the President :—" Not if Mr. Shukul will finish his reply soon."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Because the division will have to be taken."

His Excellency the President :—" I do not want to steal a march on any Member if he thinks it preferable to adjourn till 9 o'clock."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" I am not coming here after 9 and therefore my vote will be lost; I want to record my vote."

His Excellency the President :—" It will be more convenient for Mr. Shukul to reply now."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—" I shall say only a few words. It has been pointed out that the practice in India has all along been to have a majority verdict; but we must remember that it is not an ordinary procedure that we are discussing and providing for here, and that this is a measure of a drastic character ; and so I hope the Government will accept the suggestion in this case. 'That is all I have to say for the present.'

The Council re-assembled at 9-15 P.M.

9-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ My Lord, the amendment that I have the honour to place for the consideration of this Council reads thus :—

‘ That to clause 14 the following words be added :—

‘ but in no case of difference of opinion shall a sentence of death be passed.’

The clause as amended will read thus :—

‘ In the event of any difference of opinion between the members of the court, the opinion of the majority shall prevail, but in no case of difference of opinion shall a sentence of death be passed.’

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; Sir William Vincent ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; The President.]

"My Lord, coming events cast their shadows before. We are shortly going to have a first, rather a substantial instalment, we hope, of self-government, and it is in the fitness of things that we should copy some of the methods of debates in the House of Commons, at any rate in having night sittings. We are on our trial, and, I hope, we shall stand the trial all right and we shall have complete self-government in the near future.

"My Lord, coming to the amendment itself, the Council knows that we are taking away the right of trial by jury, we are taking away the right of trial by ordinary courts of law, we are doing away with commitment proceedings and we are creating special rules of evidence. We have just rejected an amendment to the effect that in case Judges are not unanimous the accused should be acquitted.

"Now I come to a more moderate amendment which I place for the consideration of this Council. The point, my Lord, is that if three Judges who sit in the special tribunal are not unanimous as regards the guilt of the accused, the accused should not be sentenced to death, and I appeal to your Excellency, and to the official members and also to the non-official members of this Council to consider this amendment favourably in the name of humanity, and I trust the amendment will be received in the spirit in which I have moved it."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I remember that when the Defence of India Act was before the Council, a very similar amendment to this was pressed, and I think that many members of this Council who were present then and are here to-day may remember it. I remember also that, although the amendment was not accepted by Government, there was a very strong feeling among the non-official members on the point, and I am prepared to accept the present amendment in substance. I do not think that it will come in properly into section 14. I have consulted with the Legislative Department which is responsible for the drafting of these measures, and I propose either to accept an amendment if the Hon'ble Member will move it, or to move an amendment myself if the Council will permit me to do so, to the following effect, by a proviso to section 16 'Provided that a sentence of death shall not be passed in any case in which there is a difference of opinion among the members of the court as to the guilt of the accused.' I trust that will meet the Hon'ble Member's wishes. It is at any rate as far as the Government are prepared to go."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Lord, I should like to know the effect of the amendment moved by the Hon'ble the Home Member. Suppose there is a difference of opinion in the court about a sentence of death, then what is to happen, and what if it is about any other sentence that may be passed?"

His Excellency the President:—"I think it will be more convenient if the Hon'ble Member were to finish his speech."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"I do not know if I can make a speech until I know what exactly the Government is prepared to accept."

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble the Home Member has said quite clearly what he is ready to suggest Government should accept. I think it would be very much better if the Hon'ble Member were to proceed with his speech."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Lord, I submit that in a matter of this importance it is necessary that we should know"

[The President ; Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Sir George Lowndes ; Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President:—"I do not know what the Hon'ble Member refers to. The significance of Mr. Patel's amendment is that it relates to the sentence of death, and on that point the Hon'ble the Home Member is prepared to meet Mr. Patel, but not on this particular section; he proposes to meet him on another section."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"My Lord, it seems to me that the only difference between Mr. Patel and Government after what the Hon'ble the Home Member has said is that the amendment should properly come under clause 16 and not under clause 14. That section deals with the sentence of death and nothing else. With regard to the other sentences, it is left to the court to pass such sentences as it may think proper. That being so, my Lord, it is quite clear that Mr. Patel's amendment is practically accepted, only instead of coming under clause 14, it comes under clause 16. If that is so, I see no difference at all."

His Excellency the President:—"I do not think there is any difference, but I do not quite understand what the Hon'ble Pandit wants."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Lord, I wanted to have the language which the Government is ready to adopt, so that we may know exactly what the effect of the change would be. It is rather a difficult task to deal with an amendment of such importance without having the language of it before us. If the Hon'ble the Home Member will be good enough to repeat it, I may be in a better position to understand it."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"My Lord, I understood really that the amendment is accepted in spirit. It is only a question of drafting, and the Hon'ble the Home Member has informed us that the Bill will be placed before the Council before it is finally passed."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"In this particular case the draft is my own final draft."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I am prepared to read the amendment out again. Though I am willing to explain it, I feel this may lead to a discussion that I am anxious to avoid:—

'Provided that a sentence of death shall not be passed in any case in which there is a difference of opinion among the members of the Court as to the guilt of the accused'."

His Excellency the President:—"Is it the wish of the Council to accept the amendment which has now been approved?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I think the Hon'ble the Home Member's amendment is perfectly clear and my suggestion is entirely met except that instead of under section 14 the amendment comes under section 16. As far as I am concerned I am perfectly satisfied."

The motion that clause 14 stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise to a point of order; I wish to make it clear that this amendment has to come in under section 16."

His Excellency the President:—"But we have just finished with section 14."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir William Vincent ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 15 as amended by the Select Committee do stand as part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Mr. Patel, if your Lordship permits, will move because his is a more detailed amendment on the same subject. "

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—" The same with mine."*

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Your Excellency, I have the honour to move the following amendment :—

" That to clause 15 the following proviso be added :—

' Provided that the Court shall not convict the accused of any offence referred to in clause (2) of the Schedule or of any attempt or conspiracy to commit any such offence or of any abetment of any such offence unless it is proved to its satisfaction that such offence, attempt, conspiracy or abetment is connected with a particular movement endangering the safety of the State.'

" I will invite in this connection the attention of the Council to the Schedule clause (2) :—

' Any of the following offences, if, in the opinion of Government, such offence is connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State, namely :—' and so and so.

" Now so far as the preliminary notification is concerned, the Governor General in Council may issue it if satisfied that the offences mentioned in the Schedule and connected with movements endangering the safety of the State are being promoted in any area; I do not also object to the Local Government laying information before the Chief Justice against a person if it is satisfied that such person has committed any scheduled offence connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State; but once such information is lodged and the case is before the Tribunal, my contention, your Excellency, is that the Tribunal must be satisfied, not merely that the offence is committed by the accused, but that such offence is connected with a particular movement endangering the safety of the State. What I mean is that, the opinion of the Local Government that the offence is connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State, should not be binding on the Court trying the accused person. If the Tribunal comes to the conclusion that, although a man has committed an offence under section 124-A, section 148 or any other section mentioned in the Schedule, that offence is an ordinary offence under the Penal Code, not in any way connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State; then the Tribunal must acquit the man. That is to say in such cases an accused person should not be deprived of the rights to which he is ordinarily entitled under the ordinary procedure, namely, the rights of trial by jury, of commitment proceedings, of appeal, if as a matter of fact the trying Tribunal finds that the offence is not connected in any way with any anarchical or revolutionary movement. The whole frame of the Act shows that it is enacted solely to deal with anarchical and revolutionary movement, and if the trying Tribunal comes to the conclusion that, though the Local Government thinks that the offence committed by the accused is connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State, the court thinks otherwise, it has no relation whatever to any such movement, then I submit the Tribunal must stay further proceedings, acquit the accused and leave it to the Government to proceed further against the accused in the ordinary court of law or not. It is therefore with a view to clear the intentions of the Government that I have moved this amendment, and I trust the Council will accept it."

* " That to clause 15 the following be added :—

' Provided that the offence of which he is so convicted is connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement.'

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; [13TH MARCH, 1919.]
The President.]

9-30 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—" My Lord, with regard to this clause 15 in the Bill what has puzzled me a little bit is this. Clause 15 runs as follows:—

' If at any trial under this Part it is proved that the accused has committed an offence against any provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule, the Court may convict the accused of that offence although he was not charged with it.'

" Now if I understand the meaning of this clause correctly, it amounts to this that, although the original information charges an accused person with one particular scheduled offence, in the course of the trial it turns out upon the evidence that another offence, but a scheduled offence has been committed, then it empowers the Court to convict the accused of that offence provided it is a scheduled offence. That being so what I cannot quite follow is when you come to the Schedule. A scheduled offence is defined by clause 2 :—' Scheduled offence means any offence specified in the Schedule.'

" If you turn to the Schedule you find under it :—

- ' (1) Any offence under Chapter VI (other than an offence under section 124-A) and sections 131 and 132 of the Indian Penal Code.' That I can quite understand. But when you come to (2) the words are :—
- ' (2) Any of the following offences, if, in the opinion of Government, such offence is connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State.'

" Well, now, here, my Lord, the words ' in the opinion of the Government ' puzzle me to a certain extent, and my point is this, whether the opinion of the Government, namely, that the offence with which the accused is charged is a scheduled offence, will be conclusive upon the court or not. If that is going to be conclusive so far as the court is concerned, then that will be decided by the Local Governments and not by the court ; otherwise I do not understand the significance of these words ' in the opinion of the Government ' because in clause 1 of the Schedule you say nothing about the opinion of the Government. Those are the scheduled offences in clause 2. If you only leave it simply at defining scheduled offences, then there is no difficulty, but if you keep these words, then, my Lord, Mr. Patel's amendment is very significant because that clears the doubt. I submit there is a doubt. It clears the doubt and the amendment then comes in very forcibly because it says—

' Provided that the Court shall not convict the accused of any offence referred to in clause (2) of the Schedule or of any attempt or conspiracy to commit any such offence or of any abetment of any such offence unless it is proved to its satisfaction (i.e., to the satisfaction of the Court not ' in the opinion of the Government ') that such offence, attempt, conspiracy or abetment is connected with a particular movement endangering the safety of the State.'

" Therefore, personally, I would rather that clause 2 of the Schedule was put right than to have this long amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I would request your Lordship to permit me to put my amendment separately, because I find that it differs in some respects from the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel. I might have misled your Lordship by saying in the first instance that they were practically the same. I do not want to make two speeches and I shall say what I wish to on this amendment, which in many respects agrees with Mr. Patel's amendment. I point that out and, if your Lordship wishes, you can put it separately."

His Excellency the President :—I understand you want to make only one speech."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Whether Your Lordship will permit me now or later, I will make only one speech."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[The President ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Sir William Vincent.]

His Excellency the President :—" You had better do it now."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" This is a question of very great importance and I do not believe that the Government could have contemplated the actual effect which might perhaps be the result if clause 15 were to be left as it stands. Clause 15 says :—

' If at any trial under this Part it is proved that the accused has committed an offence against any provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule, the Court may convict the accused of that offence although he was not charged with it.'

It may be that several accused may be put up at one trial on account of the connecting link that they were members of a revolutionary or an anarchical conspiracy and therefore have to be tried together, or it may be that one person will be put on his trial for an offence coming under any of the schedule-described offences. But in either case the gist of the offence is that it is an offence connected with a revolutionary or anarchical movement against which alone this Bill is directed. In the course of the trial under clause 15 it may be found that though the man is charged with hurt under section 326 he may be found guilty of mischief under section 435, etc. I can understand his being charged with an offence against the State, I can understand a charge of taking part in a murder and of his being convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, a lesser offence, but I cannot understand that it is meant that if a person is charged with grievous hurt or with a similar offence he should be convicted of an entirely distinct offence, for instance, an offence under the Explosive Substances Act or an offence under the Arms Act or the offence of mischief or the offence of criminal intimidation, and so on. That would be the result if this section stands as it is. Section 236 and section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code describe clearly the limitations under which a person can be convicted when the facts are capable of coming under the description of more than one offence. Section 236 says :—

' If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once.'

" Then section 237 says :—

' If in the case mentioned in section 236, the accused is charged with one offence and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" May I rise to a point of order ? There is a great deal of force in what the Hon'ble Member is saying, but I submit that it would come better in connection with an amendment which is to be moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda at a later period. Of course the point to which the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah adverted stands on a different footing."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I shall not deal with it at greater length. I only meant to say that there is that real difficulty, and that possibly the Government meant that the person may be convicted of an offence though it may not have been the offence with which he was charged on the ground that he was a member of a revolutionary conspiracy and in the course of a series of acts in pursuance of that conspiracy the various crimes are committed. That is the reason why I point it out; but I see clearly that the Government are likely to give some attention to it, so I shall not say more on that point.

" Then, my Lord, the amendment that I have suggested, which is largely covered by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment, is that the words 'in connection with an anarchical or revolutionary movement' should be inserted after the word 'Schedule', so that clause 15 will run :—

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

'If at any trial under this Part it is proved that the accused has committed an offence against any provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule in connection with an anarchical or revolutionary movement, etc.'

"I took it that the Government wished to proceed against a man not for any of these scheduled offences, but only if those offences are committed in connection with an anarchical or revolutionary movement, and that is the reason why I have suggested this amendment. Otherwise there would be this danger that if a man is to be convicted under this Chapter of an offence, even when it is not connected with a revolutionary or anarchical movement, he might be deprived of the benefits of a trial under the ordinary criminal law, and that would be so even though the Judges may find that he has committed no offence in connection with a revolutionary or anarchical conspiracy. That could not have been intended. Therefore I submit that it must be found as a fact before a person can be convicted under this Part of the Act that his offence is actually connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement. The danger that I apprehended was this. If it is only to be the Local Government in its executive capacity that is to be the judge as to whether an offence is connected with a revolutionary movement or not, then there will be great danger of the Government being misled into taking action against an individual on the strength of a recommendation that might be made to it by one of its officers in the belief that he was really connected with a revolutionary movement though he might not be so connected. That is, we are substituting the judgment of the Local Government, which may virtually mean that of a Deputy Secretary or Under-Secretary in actual practice, for the decision of a judicial tribunal; and there would also be a great temptation in cases of riots such as those which occurred in Bihar or which recently unfortunately took place in the United Provinces. Of course it may be that the officer upon whose opinion the Government will act may at first think or imagine that there is some sort of a revolutionary movement in any part of a province in which these particular offences are committed, these riots or these murders or these acts of mischief or hurt, and that there is some connection between them; then the machinery is set in motion, and although as a matter of fact it may be clearly proved that those acts had absolutely nothing to do with an anarchical or revolutionary movement, the accused will not have the slightest chance of escape from the rigorous provisions of this Code—a state of things which cannot have been contemplated by the Legislature or the Government.

"The third point is that I have given notice of an amendment in connection with the Schedule itself, and I shall have to allude to it because I have to ask that in clause 15 the words 'revolutionary and anarchical' should be substituted for the words 'any movement endangering the safety of the State', because 'any movement endangering the safety of the State' need not necessarily be an anarchical or revolutionary movement. Disaffection between several classes of His Majesty's subjects—say between Hindus and Muhammadans, or between one sect of Hindus and another sect of Hindus—a movement directed against any one of those classes may be a movement which is likely to endanger the safety of the State, but at the same time it may not be an anarchical or revolutionary movement. I thought we were aiming in this Bill only at anarchical and revolutionary movements, and not at other movements which may be equally harmful to the State, which may be equally dangerous to the safety of the State, and which may not be and which need not be revolutionary or anarchical movements. I therefore submit that we shall be unwittingly or wittingly enlarging gravely the scope of the Schedule and the scope of clause 15, unless we limit the wording of the Schedule by the employment of words like those which I have employed in my amendment. I submit we should employ language to limit the scheduled offences connected with revolutionary and anarchical movements.

"That is my first suggestion. Secondly, I submit that we should not allow the opinion of the Local Government to be final in the determination of the question as to whether any offence that a person may have committed is connected with an anarchical and revolutionary movement or a movement dangerous to the State. We should substitute for 'the opinion of the Local Government' 'the opinion of a Court of Justice'; and the moment a Court of Justice does not see any connection whatsoever between the acts of the accused and a revolutionary or anarchical movement the man must be released at that trial although he may stand ~~trial~~ for a different offence under the regular provisions of the criminal law. That is my humble submission. It is a matter of great importance, and I hope the Government will duly consider the representations made by us."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar:—"My Lord, this is only a sub-division of the whole Bill, and so when the Bill is only intended for coping with anarchical and revolutionary crimes, there is no necessity to include the amendment here. Even the attempt to define 'revolutionary' has not been successful. Further, I conscientiously believe that the crimes scheduled in the latter portion of the Bill are not less heinous than revolutionary and anarchical crimes, and so I beg to oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Lord, the Bill contains an admixture of provisions of two characters. Part I of it contains provisions for a speedy trial in judicial form of certain offences; the other consists of provisions of a preventive character. The difficulty which the amendment seeks to deal with arises from this rather unhappy combination. Now, my Lord, so far as measures of a preventive character are concerned, the Schedule stands on the footing that if in the opinion of the Government certain offences are connected with any revolutionary or anarchical movement for the purposes of prevention, those offences shall be treated as such, and a certain course of preventive measures shall be adopted. The view that the Government will take of the connection of an offence with such a movement, will be decisive so far as these preventive measures are concerned. I understand the position without admitting the wisdom of it. But Part I does not deal with prevention. Part I deals with the trial of offences—the judicial trial of certain offences, and all the part that the executive Government plays in relation to Part I is that the Governor General in Council being satisfied that in the whole or any part of British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted and that scheduled offences in connection with such movements are prevalent to such an extent that it is expedient in the interests of public safety to provide for the speedy trial of such offences, he has by a notification in the Gazette of India, to make a declaration to that effect, so that the provisions of this Part should come into force in the areas specified in the notification. This is a notification of a general character. It does not deal with any individual case; it ought not to, it is not expected to, it is not contemplated that it should affect the decision of any particular case with regard to the charge of guilt, or character of the guilt, which the court may have to try. The notification having been made, the Local Government has to initiate proceedings against any individual. The proceedings having been initiated against a person charged with having committed an offence which comes in the category of scheduled offences, a judicial trial—not in the ordinary regular constitutional form which we are familiar with in the existing law of the land, but a judicial trial under a special constitution and under certain special rules of evidence—has to take place. Now the trial of the accused may relate to an offence under Part I of the Schedule. In that case the Court has only to be satisfied, before it can pass any sentence upon him, that he is guilty of an offence or offences which are mentioned in the first part of the Schedule, namely, any offence in Chapter VI other than an offence under section 124-A, i.e., an offence against the State or against the Army or the Navy: that stands on a different footing. A court can come to a conclusion with regard to any of those offences without their being complicated with any other offences or considerations. But a trial for an offence included in the second part of the Schedule will be complicated. As section 15 stands the Court will have to find whether the man is guilty of any of the numerous offences other than those with which he may be charged which are mentioned in the second part of the Schedule. I need not repeat all the sections that are there referred to. But if a man is tried for any one particular offence this section as it stands would give the court permission to convict him of any offence against any provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule, though the accused may not have been charged with it. Now, my Lord, these offences receive their grave character by reason of their being connected, as it is put in Schedule 2, with any movement endangering the safety of the State; that, therefore, is an important element in determining the character of the offence, the extent or gravity of the guilt of the accused. That will determine the attitude of the court in dealing out punishment to the man. Now the question arises. Has the court any power to deal judicially, to come to a judicial determination, on the question whether any of the offences described in Schedule 2 has been committed by the person who is on trial? That question necessarily involves a decision on two things, one that the offence should be one of those that is named in the Schedule 2 (a), and secondly that such an offence should be connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State. Obviously it should need no argument to show that it is the Court which is seized of the trial which should come to a determination on both elements which go to make up the offence which the Court is constituted to deal with. But then we tumble upon this expression in 2(a), namely, any of the following offences if in the opinion of Government such offence is connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State. That creates an insuperable obstacle; as the Bill stands, the Court must swallow this unjudicial executive decision, namely, that a certain offence which it is sitting to try is connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State. It can do nothing else unless what Mr. Patel has suggested is accepted. It should be left to the Court to come to a conclusion on both the two Parts which go up to constitute the offence which alone it is contemplated, that the special court should deal with. But if it is not to be, the court will then try the accused, find that he is guilty of a certain offence, and assume that that offence is connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State, and proceed upon that basis to determine the sentence which it should pass upon the man. Its judgment is also to be influenced by that circumstance in arriving at a conclusion as to whether the man is, or is not guilty.

" I submit, my Lord, the Bill creates a very extraordinary position. So far as the first Part of this Bill is concerned, all that the Government has expressed as its desire to secure is a speedy trial of certain offences but still a judicial trial. But section 15 as it stands will mean much more than a speedy trial; it will mean a partial trial of an offence; it will mean a trial of an offence in determining which one important part of the judgment will have been arrived at by the executive government and imposed upon the court, which the court will have no power, no jurisdiction to question, to deal with, to determine; and another part which the court will have to determine.

" I submit, my Lord, that this should be avoided, that so far at least as Part I is concerned where a judicial trial is provided the Legislature should secure that the trial is a fair, impartial and complete trial, so far at any rate as the determination of the offence is concerned, namely, the complete offence with which a man is charged. If the court is not to try the fact, whether the offence is or is not connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State, then I submit the very least that should be done is that when the court does not feel satisfied that the particular offence with which a man has been charged has not been proved against him, that man ought to be acquitted. The man ought to be acquitted by the special Court. That does not mean that a man who may be guilty will be let go altogether. There are other provisions of the law under which he can be tried, according to the ordinary regular procedure provided in our Codes. The advantage to him will be that he will not then be deprived of the constitutional safeguards of life and liberty which are provided for him. The moment the court feels that a man is not guilty of the particular offence for which he was placed on trial before it, I submit the court ought to stop its proceedings and let the man go. It is not an answer to this argument to suggest that the time of the court will have been wasted and that another court will have to sit to sift the facts and to try the man. It is essential, it is necessary in the interests of justice, unless justice is to be murdered to the extent to which the trial of an important element of the offence is concerned, unless justice is to be denied to the man so far as the trial of an essential element of the offence is concerned, I submit it is necessary that the man should be acquitted so far as the special tribunal is concerned.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Sir William Vincent.]

"Now, my Lord, the result that would follow would be that if a person accused of an ordinary offence would have the right to be placed before a Magistrate in the ordinary course, committed for trial, if the Magistrate finds that there are grounds for it, he will have his trial in the Sessions court and have his appeal to the High Court. For all these reasons I submit that either these Schedules should be defined separately, differently, for the purposes of Part I and Parts II and III, namely, the judicial trial portion and the preventive measures portion ; or it should be provided—if I might move an amendment—it should be provided that when it is proved to the satisfaction of the court in any trial under this Part that the accused has not committed the offence with which he was charged, he must be acquitted. If this is not acceptable to Government at this stage, then I submit that the very least that ought to be done is to accept the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment. I hope, my Lord, the matter will be considered impartially. I hope that the proper course will be followed which will ensure that the decision in such a trial as is provided for in Part I, will not be vitiated by the inevitable necessity of the court accepting the verdict of the Executive Government with regard to an important element in the offence with which the man is charged before it."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, what the Court has to decide in this case as in every case is whether a certain accused person is guilty of a particular offence or not. Before the accused is put on trial before a court under this Part, the Government comes to a distinct decision as to whether that offence is connected with revolutionary or anarchical movements or not. And in accordance with that decision of Government the question of the tribunal before which a man is to be tried for a particular offence is decided. In no case is there any question putting him before a partial or unfair tribunal as has been suggested."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"I rise to a point of order. I did not say that it would be a partial or unfair tribunal. I did not attack the tribunal."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"I was going to say that 10-1 P.M. the Government then constitutes a singularly strong and impartial tribunal by which this offence will be tried. I have already explained to the Council that one of the objects for which this procedure is intended is to secure an expeditious and at the same time a perfectly fair and impartial trial. I ventured to put it to the Council now, that the procedure which the Hon'ble Mr. Patel suggests would be destructive of expedition, and would indeed make the trial of any offence by one of these tribunals almost impossible. Not only would the court have to decide points which ordinarily come before criminal courts that is whether the accused is guilty of murder or not, they would have to go into the further and abstruse question as to whether this murder was connected with some revolutionary conspiracies. May I take an instance. Let me take the case of a man like Pingley who was well known revolutionary ; let us assume as was the fact in this case that there was the clearest evidence of guilt of an offence punishable with death. Let us assume as was actually the case that Pingley committed this crime in pursuance of a revolutionary conspiracy, and that this last information was derived from a number of facts which could not be placed before the court and the proof of which would have necessitated entering into a number of points entirely unconnected with the simple issue whether or not Pingley had committed murder. I want to know whether the Council thinks that such a man should be acquitted simply because evidence is not tendered to show that the murder was connected with a revolutionary conspiracy.

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

"The question whether this murder was in furtherance of a conspiracy is really a condition precedent to putting the man before the court. If the Government is satisfied on this point, then only is the man put before this special tribunal appointed under this Part, but it would be impossible for the court again to go into that question of revolutionary conspiracy without trying a number of facts which are irrelevant to the trial; every inquiry would be protracted interminably. In fact the whole object of the part which is to secure an expeditious trial would be lost. It is for this reason that I regret I am unable to accept this amendment. Let me assume that an accused was before the ordinary courts, would that court have to decide such questions? Certainly not. The only question it would have to decide is whether this man had committed murder or not. If the court of three High Court Judges find ample evidence to show that a man has committed the offence with which he is charged, I submit the question whether it was committed in connection with a revolutionary conspiracy or not is not one that you can reasonably ask the court to discuss or to examine; for this reason I must oppose this amendment. It was a little surprising to find the Hon'ble Mr. Patel assuming complete ignorance as to the intention of Government in this matter. I do not know if I am divulging a secret but I may go so far as to say that the question was discussed at length considerably in Select Committee. The amendment of Mr. Sarma as to the Schedule is a separate matter with which I need not deal with at present."

10-13 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"Your Excellency, I am certainly aware of the circumstance that this point received attention in Select Committee. I think it was unfortunate that our views did not prevail in that Committee when we were considering the point; for it seems to me that it has an intimate bearing on the principle of the Bill as frequently enunciated by the Hon'ble the Home Member.

"The Council will remember that not once or twice but a good deal oftener the suspicion that has been expressed with regard to this Bill is that in times of excitement and trouble Government may be under a temptation to use it for purposes for which we do not at present intend it. Having been intended for the trial of offences connected with movements endangering the safety of the State, this procedure may come to be used for the trial of offences not coming under that description. This was the suspicion that we have frequently expressed that critics in newspapers and elsewhere who are opposing this measure in the country have often expressed. Our great suspicion has been, I repeat it, that this may be used to deal with ordinary political offences. We were told that we were entertaining unjust and unfounded suspicions; we were told that Government had no such intentions at all, and in order to make it clear that that was no part of Government's intention, the words 'anarchical and revolutionary movements' were introduced in the Preamble and in certain sections. So far it was satisfactory. But we find on examination that that would not fully allay the suspicions that have been created, and I am afraid what the Hon'ble the Home Member says now will help the continuance of this suspicion. To remove the suspicion entirely, I think it is necessary for the Hon'ble the Home Member to meet the Hon'ble Mr. Patel fully. For supposing an area, say Bengal, is declared by the Governor General in Council as a place to which this Part shall apply owing to the prevalence of anarchical and revolutionary movements; suppose there the Local Government believing a person guilty of an offence connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State, puts him up for trial before this special tribunal, but actually in the course of the trial it turns out clearly that his offence, although say, it might have been grievous hurt, one of the scheduled things, although it might have been grievous hurt, had nothing whatever to do with any movement endangering the safety of the State but arose say, from a boundary dispute or a domestic quarrel; supposing it was so. Then according to the interpretation of the Hon'ble the Member, the Court would still proceed with the trial and finish up with a conviction. Now as soon as the officers of the Local Government found out that even in a case of that kind where it was clearly established that the offence was not connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State, they could go on and get the court to record a conviction. I am perfectly certain that, as things go, in a proclaimed area under a state of excitement and public disturbance, the court will be filled every day with people brought up under one kind or another of offence coming under the Schedule, but not necessarily connected with movements of an anarchical or revolutionary nature. Once the officers find out that they can bring up people before courts, secure expeditious convictions and so contribute to the time when peace will be established in the province, the court will come more and more to be used for such purposes. Section 124-A and section 153-A with regard to which our feelings are most tender, sections dealing with sedition and offences connected with exciting feelings between different classes of His Majesty's subjects, it is just those sections which are likely in times of disturbance, with the best of intentions in the world but with no particular anarchical or revolutionary ideas as in many cases, I think, the officers of the Government are willing to grant, that it is just in those cases that the likelihood is the greatest of people actually being brought up before this trial and rushed through to a conviction without however really coming within its scope. That is why we are anxious that the court should in every case record a finding upon the question whether the offence is really connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State. It is only when the Hon'ble the Home Member admits this amendment and compels the court to record a finding on that that he will stand clear, that he will be acknowledged by us to have given full effect to the intentions, that he has so frequently expressed, that it is not the desire of Government to use this Act for anything but the trial of anarchical and revolutionary crime. There is great danger of the other thing taking place, and I would therefore beg the Hon'ble the Home Member to reconsider his attitude and not to allow any part of the impression to remain that perhaps this undesired effect will follow. I am prepared to concede this that it will lead to a certain waste of public time of the court. The court having tried an offence up to a certain stage will have to abandon it altogether when it finds that the crime charged is not, as the Local Government supposed, actually connected with anarchical or revolutionary movement. The thing will have to stop there. That amount of inconvenience and waste of time there is, but I think the Government, anxious as it is, to establish the character of this Bill as absolutely clear and not intended to deal with ordinary political crime, that amount of inconvenience is a risk that Government must be content to run.

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

"Your Excellency, there is just one other point which I wish to impress on the Government. Let it not be supposed that, even if the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment be fully accepted, it will answer the case of those critics both here and outside this Council who tell us frequently that this is a weapon that Government are forging not merely for the purpose of dealing with anarchical and seditious crime, but actually to strengthen their hands and to put down political movements which become inconvenient to Government. To answer them fully Parts II, III and IV will have also to be radically re-cast. This is not enough, but if this be not done, then, I think, the criticisms will stand justified and the intentions that have been expressed, I am prepared to accept them at their face value, the intentions that have been expressed will, I think, remain without satisfactory proof that effect will be given to them in the sections."

[Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru ; Sir George Lowndes.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—"It seems to me, my Lord, that there are two important stages which have got to be borne in mind. The first stage is that which is covered by clause 3 of this Bill, under which it is open to the Governor General in Council to declare that in the whole or any part of British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted, and if scheduled offences in connection with such movements are prevalent to such an extent that it is expedient, in the interests of the public safety, to provide for the speedy trial of such offences. Well, the Governor General having declared that such anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted, the next stage is reached when action is taken against a particular individual or a number of individuals connected with that movement. When such action is taken the question at once arises, what are the courses open to that individual or those individuals? Now the individual concerned may take one of two courses; either he may say he is not at all guilty, or he may plead guilty to the offence, and at the same time say he is not guilty of the offence within the meaning of this Act, that is to say, although he may have committed any one of those offences which are described in the Schedule, yet he may ~~say~~ ^{claim} that he has not committed any one of those offences in connection with any anarchical or revolutionary movement. Well, if he does plead that the court has got to consider that question upon clauses 3 and 15, and I submit there is nothing to prevent the court coming to the conclusion, yes or no, as to whether that man is connected with that movement or not. But the answer to that argument is that the court cannot do it because in the Schedule that has been attached to this Bill it is not open to the court to go into the question as to whether the individual has committed that offence in connection with any movement or not, because that is a matter which depends on the opinion of the Government. The words in the Schedule are:—'any of the following offences, in the opinion of Government, such offence is connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State,' and then the offences are set out. So that it seems to me, my Lord, that the function of the court will be simply to go on with the question as to whether the man has committed the offence or not and to shut its eyes to the further question whether that offence was connected with anarchical movement or not and to accept, without challenge, the opinion of the Local Government. It really means that the Local Government's or the executive Government's decision is super-imposed upon the will of the trying Magistrate or the Judge. My Lord, I submit that is not fair and that is not consistent with the avowed policy of the Bill. You allow the court simply to try the bare question as to whether the man had or had not committed that offence, but you do not allow the court to try the most vital question, namely, whether that offence is connected with the movement or not. I submit if you take out these words 'in the opinion of the Government' from the Schedule there will be no occasion for the amendment put forward by Mr. Patel. It is because those words are there that I think it necessary that that amendment should be accepted. My Lord, I think the question is one of very great importance, and if you take away that privilege and that right from the court, the privilege and right of deciding whether any particular offence is connected with that movement, I submit you take away a most valuable safeguard from the liberty of the individual."

10-27 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"My Lord, whether this provision is right or wrong may be disputable, but the Council are rather in danger of losing sight of the thread of it. The Hon'ble Pandit has said that an important element of the offence is that it is connected with anarchical and revolutionary crime. He said at least twice, I think three times, that we were withdrawing from this tribunal the cognisance of this important element of the offence. Let us get right away from that at once. The tribunal has to decide whether a particular offence has been committed or not. The offences are set out in the Penal Code sufficiently for their purpose. We will take an illustration—murder, arson, dacoity, grievous hurt, those are the offences. Then what tribunal has to try them? Ordinarily they are tried by what we call here the ordinary courts of the country. In particular cases they will be tried by special tribunals. But it is the same offences in each case ; it is murder, yes or no, that the tribunal has to try ; it is arson, yes or no, dacoity, yes or no. Those are the offences. Their connection with something else has nothing to do with the offences whatever. So far from being an important element in the offence it has no connection with it whatever. A man is guilty under the laws of his country and he is liable to exactly the same penalty whether he has committed merely murder or dacoity, or murder or dacoity in connection with revolutionary conspiracy. The offence is an utterly different thing and utterly apart from the question whether it is connected with a revolutionary conspiracy. How the opinion of the Local Government comes in is this. Is the offence to be tried by a special tribunal or by the ordinary tribunals of the country ? That is the question that the Local Government has to decide. Under what conditions has the Local Government to decide it ? In the first place, it can only decide it if the Governor General in Council has declared that in the particular part of India to which Part I of the Bill may be applied, revolutionary or anarchical movements are rife and scheduled offences have been committed to such an extent that it is necessary to constitute a special tribunal for their speedy trial. Therefore you have got to have a part of India where it has been declared that revolutionary offences are rife and where these offences are being constantly committed before the Local Government can be called upon to decide whether it is necessary to try them by a special tribunal. But this has nothing to do with the offences ; the offence that will have to be tried by that tribunal is murder, arson, dacoity, grievous hurt, or whatever it may be, exactly as it would be in any other court. It has no concern with anything else ; it is only that that tribunal will only take cognizance of any offences if the Local Government thinks that the particular offences are connected with a revolutionary movement. In fact, as one of my Hon'ble colleagues put it to me just now, what the Hon'ble Pandit and those who support him are asking is, that the tribunal should try the very cause that has brought it into existence. That is surely impossible. The question will be whether particular offences are to be tried in the ordinary course or by a special tribunal, and on that we propose, rightly or wrongly, that the opinion of the Local Government should be final ; they are to decide whether a particular offence is to go to this tribunal or to the ordinary courts, and we propose that their decision on that should be final. My Hon'ble colleague the Home Member has pointed out why it is practically impossible that the tribunal should go into the question whether the offence is connected with such a conspiracy or not. Are you going to try the man for murder, first find he has committed murder, or arson, or whatever it is, and then solemnly sit down and consider whether the murder was connected with a revolutionary conspiracy, in order to see whether the court ought to have tried it or not ? Surely you are not going to do that ? But perhaps my Hon'ble friend would begin by trying whether there is a revolutionary conspiracy, and after he had tried that for a year or so try the offence, which is the real question the tribunal has before it."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir George Lowndes ; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"I rise to make an explanation ; revolutionary conspiracy is a matter to be decided by the Governor General in Council and declared by notification ; that will not be part of the inquiry."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Hon'ble friend is quite correct. It proceeds by stages, there is first the declaration by the Governor General in Council that a state of what I may call anarchy exists and that offences specified in the Schedule are constantly being committed ; then there is a special tribunal constituted to try the offences—we are not going to constitute it ad hoc ; we are going to constitute a special tribunal to try all scheduled offences—and then there will be a trial of an offence by that tribunal if it comes under the Schedule and in the opinion of the Government is connected with any movement endangering the safety of the State.

"Therefore, when an offence goes to that tribunal it can only go to it under the orders of the Local Government. The tribunal cannot try any of these particular offences unless, in the opinion of the Local Government, it is an offence connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State. We do not propose to leave that question for the decision of the tribunal; it is for the Local Government alone. Rightly or wrongly, that is the position.

"But we have my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sastri—am sure he did not mean it—complaining that cases would be rushed through to conviction. Does he seriously think that, when you have got a tribunal of High Court Judges, whom so many Hon'ble Members say they must implicate, cases will be rushed through to a conviction?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"I am sorry to have been misunderstood. When I said 'rushed through' I only meant put through expeditiously."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I am sorry, but I am afraid the word 'rushed' bears rather an unpleasant interpretation on my mind; I am glad the Hon'ble Member meant no more than that. And really is there any real fear of this provision being abused? You have got the conditions of proclamation of the province, and the Local Government's opinion as to the character of the offence. There must be gross dishonesty on the part of a Local Government which wishes to try ordinary political offences by this procedure, gross dishonesty and nothing else. You have got similarly three High Court Judges to try the case. Is it to be supposed that they will sit down under any sort of thing knowing that offences which are being sent to them day after day for trial have no connection with the disturbances in the province? It is supposed by my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, that even a worm would not turn against this sort of thing? It is absurd, if I may say so.

"Rightly or wrongly, that is the proposal that we put to this Council that it shall be for the Government to decide whether particular cases are connected with these revolutionary movements or not, and that the tribunal will try the offence, it being no element of that offence that it is connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"Perhaps the Hon'ble the Law Member might explain to the Council if he thinks that the tribunal will have absolutely no jurisdiction to go into that question, because it at once raises the question of jurisdiction."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I am afraid I did not catch what the Hon'ble Member said, and I am unable, therefore, to reply to him, but, as I presume he was only making a personal explanation, it is perhaps not necessary for me to do so."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Lord, I should like"

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble Member is a very old member of this Council and he knows perfectly well what the rules of this Council are, and yet he is frequently infringing them. His only right is to get up on a question of personal explanation, but he is continually getting up on points which are not allowed by the rules of this Council. Is it a personal explanation that he wishes to make?"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Yes, on the point your Lordship has been pleased to put. As a member of this Council of ten years' standing and as a student of Parliamentary proceedings, I thought that it was permissible for any member to ask for an explanation whenever a matter was not clear to him. If your Lordship will permit me to explain what I wanted to ask the Hon'ble Member was, whether if the question of an offence being connected with a revolutionary movement will not be a matter for the court to decide, that circumstance will yet affect the sentence which a Court may pass upon the person who is tried? I should be very sorry if it should be thought that I was infringing the rules of this Council. I can assure your Lordship that I do not do so, so far as I can."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, before I reply I should like to know whether the Court will have jurisdiction to go into the question whether the case is connected with a revolutionary movement or not, or whether it must stay its hands and merely find that the man has committed one of the offences mentioned in the Schedule. I hope the Hon'ble the Law Member will make it quite clear whether the Court will be entitled to go into that question at all."

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble the Law Member has made his speech; it is now for the Hon'ble Member to reply."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I wish to know, before I reply, whether according to the Hon'ble the Law Member, the Court will be entitled to go into that question at all or not? My reply will depend upon the answer."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"Perhaps it may be convenient for me to say that I must decline to be cross-examined in this Council by my brother lawyers."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"If that is so, I need not reply. I make it that the Court will be entitled to go into it and, therefore, my amendment is quite justifiable."

The motion was put and the Council divided as follows:—

[The President; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's amendment "that in clause 15, after the word 'Schedule' the words 'in connection with an anarchical or revolutionary movement' be inserted" was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's amendment—

"That to clause 15 the following be added :—

'Provided that the offence of which he is so convicted is connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement.'

was by leave withdrawn.

10-45 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"My Lord, I beg to move this amendment to clause 15. I ought to explain, My Lord, that the latter part of this amendment, * I find, has been disposed of already. I shall therefore only move the first part, which runs as follows :—

* 'Provided further that the Court shall, when so convicting the accused, record a finding that such offence is connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement.'

'That the following proviso be added to clause 15 :—

'Provided that before convicting the accused of such other offence the Court shall give him an opportunity of showing that he is not guilty of it by recalling and cross-examining or further cross-examining any prosecution witness, as the case may be, or examining any defence witness whether such witness has been previously examined or not.'

"My Lord, I confess I do not really know why this clause has been inserted. I have been told more than once in connection with my amendments that the provisions about which I have been moving amendments are already in the Code and there is no need to insert those provisions here. If the Council will turn to section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, they will see it runs like this :—

'If, in the case mentioned in section 236'—that is to say,

'If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences.'

"Even if in the case mentioned just now

'the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it'.

"This section, my Lord, entirely covers the ground of clause 15. My submission is either this clause is not necessary, or if it is necessary, then you have to incorporate the other provisions from the Criminal Procedure Code. You have adopted the language of one section, and it follows that either you must omit this clause altogether or add a proviso that before the Court can convict the accused of any other offence, you must give him an opportunity to prove that he is not guilty of such offence, in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, sections 227—231. Section 227 lays down that :—

'Any Court may alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced, or, in the case of trials before the Court of Session or High Court, before the verdict of the jury is returned or the opinions of the assessors are expressed.'

"Section 229 runs thus :—

'If the new or altered or added charge is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused or the prosecutor as aforesaid, the Court may either direct a new trial or adjourn the trial for such period as may be necessary.'

[13TH MARCH, 1919.] [*Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Sir James DuBoulay ;
Mr. V. J. Patel.*]

“ And section 231 says :—

‘ Whenever a charge is altered or added to by the Court after the commencement of the trial, the prosecutor and the accused shall be allowed to recall or re-examine, and examine with reference to such alteration or addition, any witness who may have been examined, and also to call any further witness whom the Court may think to be material.’

“ My submission is that in view of this section of the Code there is no necessity for this clause, but having included this clause, you ought in justice to the accused, in fairness to the accused embody those provisions which my amendment seeks to reproduce here. Otherwise some difficulty might result. The Court might feel that as we have adopted only one section, it follows that our intention was that the other sections were not to be referred to; and the Court might try a man for an offence quite different from the offence with which he was charged. I move this amendment, my Lord.”

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—“ My Lord, I think that the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda has touched a spot in this Bill on which we might possibly be able to meet him. Clause 15 is, I think, necessary, and the necessity of it is proved by the discussion which has just been completed. If the Hon'ble Member had any possible doubt as to whether the Court might convict an accused person of an offence against a provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule, although it is not proved to be, or held by the Court to be, connected with a movement directed against the State, that has been set at rest by the decision which this Council has just reached. But it was never intended to be in doubt, and the absence of any mention of the matter in the Bill shows that a clause of this kind is essential.

“ On the other hand, as the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda has pointed out, you might have a man charged with arson and under this section convicted of, say, murder. In such circumstances the provisions of section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code ought to be complied with; they contemplate

‘ a single act or series of acts of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute,’ etc., etc.,

before a man can be convicted of an offence he has not been charged with, and I venture to suggest that if we modified this section in the following sense it would meet the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda, and I ask your Lordship to permit me to move the following amendment to the Bill :—

‘ That for clause 15 of the Bill the following be substituted :—

‘ At any trial under this Part, the accused may be charged with and convicted of any offence against any provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule.’”

“ I would point out that the result of that clause would be to make it quite clear that a Court could charge a man with and convict him of any offence which is referred to in the Schedule, while at the same time he would have the benefit of all those various sections of the Criminal Procedure Code to which the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda has referred. The Criminal Procedure Code would come into play automatically under clause 7 of the Bill.”

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ My Lord, I have heard the Hon'ble Member for Government, but the difficulty probably will be this. Supposing a man is charged with a certain offence under the Schedule and at the close of the case the Court finds that the man is guilty of another offence mentioned in the Schedule, then the Court can under the clause as it stands alter the charge, that is, frame a new charge and convict him. This will deprive the accused of an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses in the matter of the new charge. That is the point my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda wishes to provide for by this amendment as I understand it

Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—“ Has the Hon'ble Member read section 231 of the Code ? ”

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Sir James DuBoulay ; Sir William Vincent ; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.]

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—(After reading section). "That meets the difficulty I see."

His Excellency the President :—"Do you accept that, Mr. Chanda?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I think my Lord, it will meet the requirements of the case. If I understood the Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay correctly, section 231 will all be incorporated."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—"It is already incorporated under clause 7 of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"There is an alteration which is proposed in clause 15 is that the accused—will the Hon'ble Member please repeat the amendment he suggests?"

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay :—"At any trial under part the accused may be charged with, and convicted of, any offence against the provision of law which is referred to in the Schedule."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I accept the amendment proposed by the Government."

The motion as amended was put and agreed to.

The motion that clause 15 as amended by the Select Committee and further amended stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that to clause 16 the following proviso be added: (it is the proviso I have just referred to):—

'Provided that a sentence of death shall not be passed in any case in which there is difference of opinion among the members of the Court as to the guilt of the accused.'

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that clause 16 as amended do stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I beg to move that clause 17 stand part of the Bill."

10-58 P.M.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—"My Lord, I beg to move that for clause 17 the following clause be substituted :—

'17. (1) An appeal shall lie from the judgment of the Court to a Full Bench of the High Court consisting of at least five judges.

(2) The High Court shall not have any authority to transfer any case from the Court or to make any order under section 491 of the Code or, save as provided in sub-clause (1), have any jurisdiction in respect of any proceedings under this Part.'

A comparison of the wording of the amendment which I have placed before the Council with the wording of the original clause will be found to be to

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammed Shafi.]

Hon'ble Members that the only change which I seek to introduce consists in giving a right of appeal to a person convicted under this Part to a full bench of the High Court. The remaining provisions of the original clause stand intact. Now, my Lord, in a case of special legislation intended to meet a particular emergency it is, respectfully submit, unjustifiable to depart from the ordinary law of the land except to the extent to which it may be absolutely essential to meet that emergency. The question then arises whether the forfeiture of the right of appeal contemplated in the original clause is justified by the necessity of the case. We have been told during the debate on this Bill that the main object of the Bill in introducing Part I is to provide for an expeditious trial of the offence committed in tracts where anarchical or revolutionary movements may be in existence. Well, my Lord, that object is gained in two ways; firstly, by putting an end to the commitment stage, and secondly, by adopting a procedure at the trial which is more abridged than the ordinary procedure in trials under the Criminal Procedure Code. Therefore when the stage of conviction has been reached the main object which the Government had in view has already been achieved. What then is the necessity of putting an end to the right of appeal in a case like this? It seems to me that this cherished right of the people, that is to say the right which enables them to appeal against conviction in criminal cases, particularly where they are charged with serious crimes of the description mentioned in the Schedule, ought to be taken away only if there is justifiable necessity for it, and it seems to me that the main object of the Bill which the Government have in view having been achieved before the stage of conviction is reached, there is absolutely no necessity whatever for taking away that right of appeal. Then, my Lord, there is another important consideration to which I venture to invite the attention of Council. It is, I submit, in the conditions obtaining in India an axiomatic truth to say that the confidence of the people in the British administration of justice is the corner stone on which the edifice of the British Raj is built, and it seems to me that this Council should not be party to any legislation which is calculated even in the slightest degree to impair that confidence. My Lord, if the right of appeal which is deeply cherished by the people is taken away under Part I without any adequate reason, I for one have not the slightest doubt that there will be ground for that confidence being impaired, and in any case it will give opportunities to hostile critics of Government to go to the people and say 'Here is a special emergency for which the Government has provided a special procedure and has passed a special enactment; at the same time without any necessity whatever they have made away with your right of appeal.' This Council, I submit, should be very jealous in guarding the good name of Government; it should not be party to any legislation which is calculated to make the Government unnecessarily unpopular with the people; and it seems to me that this abolition of the right of appeal is such a departure from the ordinary law of the land which is calculated to make the Government unpopular with the people.

"There is another reason for which I commend my amendment to the acceptance of this Council. The amendment which was put forward by a number of my Hon'ble colleagues that conviction in the case of trials under Part I should be had only in the case of unanimity of opinion of the members constituting the special tribunal has already been rejected.

"Your Excellency, I submit that rejection has made it a fortiori necessary that there should be a right of appeal. It is clear to me that where one out of three Judges of the High Court is of opinion that no case has been made out against the accused, his conviction of the serious offence mentioned in the Schedule would be unjustifiable. At all events, in that case it is absolutely essential that the convict should be given a right of appeal to a full bench of five judges. For the element of doubt which the finding of one High Court Judge brings into the case—an element of substantial doubt—makes it very hard for the convicted person to be deprived of his right of appeal. Possibly it may be said, as it was said on a former occasion, that there is no appeal 'in criminal trials held in the High Court. But there is a difference between the trials before the special tribunal constituted under this Act and the criminal trials before the High Court under the Criminal Procedure Code. Trials under the Criminal Procedure Code are held with the assistance of a jury. The finding of fact in the case is arrived at not by a judge, but by a jury consisting of nine or less persons by which a judge is ordinarily bound; the judge applies the law to the finding and pronounces his judgment. Even in the case of a trial by jury held in a High Court, there is a right of appeal on the ground of misdirection in certain cases. I have put this amendment before the Council for an additional reason. The Irish Crimes Act does provide for an appeal against conviction in the case of special tribunals under that Act. The Act practically stands on the same footing and therefore the precedent of the Irish Act is in my favour. I submit, therefore, that my amendment ought to be accepted by the Council on this ground. On the ground that as a matter of principle the right vested in the subject should not be taken away, unless the taking away of the right is absolutely essential for the emergency in view, on the ground of public policy which requires that this Council should not be a party to the enactment of a measure which lays Government open to hostile attacks, and thirdly, on the ground of precedent I commend my motion to the acceptance of the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:--"My Lord, I have amendment very similar to that moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi. I agree the principle, but, I think, my amendment is better. I propose the following clause:—

'That for clause 17 the following clause be substituted—

'17 (1) Any person convicted by a special tribunal under this Act may, subject to the provisions of this Act, appeal either against the conviction and sentence of the Court or against the sentence alone, to the Court of Criminal Appeal constituted under this Act, on any ground whether of law or of fact; and the Court of Criminal Appeal shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have power after hearing the appeal to confirm the conviction and sentence, or to enter an acquittal, or to vary the conviction or sentence. Provided that:—

(a) the conviction shall not be varied save by substituting a conviction for some less offence, for which the Special Tribunal had jurisdiction on the trial to convict the appellant; and

(b) the sentence shall not be increased.

(2) The conviction and sentence as confirmed or varied by the Court of Criminal Appeal shall have effect as if it were the conviction and sentence of the Special Tribunal and shall be deemed to be the sentence of a Special Tribunal.

(3) If the appellant establishes want of jurisdiction in the Special Tribunal the Court of Criminal Appeal may quash the proceedings.

(4) The Court of Criminal Appeal shall have for the purpose of any appeal all the powers and jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal.'

"I have taken this clause from section 2 of 45 and 46 Victoria, Chapter 25, that is the Irish Act. In this section it is made clear that in trials by a jury no appeal lies. In this case there is to be no jury but there will be three judges who have to decide a case; it might be urged that an appeal would not lie. I make it clear—or rather the section in the Irish Act makes it clear for me—that an appeal may lie on points of fact and points of law. It gives power which is usually given to the courts, namely, to confirm the sentence or to vary it, but in varying it the power to increase is taken away. This is in accordance with the Irish Act. There is also a clause No. (3) that 'if the appellant establishes want of jurisdiction in the Special Tribunal the Court of Criminal Appeal may quash the proceedings.' This, I think, requires an explanation. The Irish Act so far as I can gather and my object was that when these proceedings are taken by the Local Governments, the Chief Justice establishes a court and the accused is brought before it and tried, the accused has had no chance of saying that the Tribunal has no jurisdiction to try him for various reasons urged. There was an amendment moved, I think, that a man should have a chance of showing cause why he should not be tried by that Tribunal. That amendment has been rejected. I have introduced it here so that a man may not take that objection, it might cause delay and defeat the object of the Bill which is a speedy trial. After the trial is finished and a man has been sentenced, the object of the trial has been accomplished.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

"There is no reason why this should not be permitted. I have put it in here as it is in accordance with the precedent of section 2 of the Irish Crimes Act. The reasons why there should be an appeal have been given by Mr. Shafi. I agree with them, but I can add to these reasons firstly, that though there are three judges and that though they are High Court Judges and gentlemen of great eminence and long experience, still it might be urged, why do you want an appeal? It is for this reason I do not want to take away the right of a man to appeal, it is doing here an injury to his fundamental right. The fundamental right of the subject is that his liberty shall not be taken away without a sentence, and when it is taken away it must be possible for him to appeal. If the right is taken away his liberty is infringed. There is at the same time a very strong reason why a person should be allowed to go up before the highest court with the assistance of his counsel. That being a fundamental right, I am inclined to think that there is no injury done either to the scheme of this Bill or to the objects of this Bill in permitting an appeal. On the contrary, if you permit this appeal the great advantage is that the public at large would be satisfied that the accused person has had a careful and patient hearing in the first court, and that he had a chance in the appeal court also and that whatever human efforts could do have been done for the man. While if no appeal is allowed, there would always remain a grievance; the man himself may believe that he has not been properly heard, and the world at large may say 'Oh, there were three judges and yet the man did not get a proper chance of a careful and patient hearing in the highest court' and there the thing would end. That is to say, there would be room left for people to doubt the justice of the case. To remove all these doubts and difficulties in matters of this kind, and in order to instil confidence in the public as well as in the culprit, I submit that this provision is essentially necessary. As I said before, it is not enough to be right in this world and especially in matters of doing justice, but we should also appear to be right. For these reasons I submit that an appeal should be permitted. Of course I like to put the amendment in the terms in which I have drafted it, because I think my wording makes the amendment more specific and clear. With these words I submit this amendment for the judgment of this Hon'ble Council."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"My Lord, 11-18
I support the amendment which has been moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi, and I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde that the form which he has suggested would be better. I would retain the latter portion of Mr. Shafi's amendment. I hope on a perusal of Mr. Khaparde's amendment Mr. Shafi will see the advantage of such a proposal.

"Now, my Lord, the reasons in support of this amendment have been very well stated by both the previous speakers. I have, therefore, only to add a few words in support thereof. In the first place, I would lay emphasis on the fact that an appeal is an important safeguard against injustice being done. This right has been provided in the case of criminal trials for all these decades and centuries, and it ought not to be taken away unless there is a very strong and substantial reason for such a course being taken. This can only possibly arise in very special circumstances even during a period of war. But the situation now is entirely different. The provisions of the Bill are based upon the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee. As they say in paragraph 182 of their Report, they have recommended in substance the procedure established under the Defence of India Act. The Defence of India Act substantially embodied the main provisions of the draft Ordinance originally proposed by Sir Michael O'Dwyer as is stated in paragraph 136 of the Rowlatt Committee's Report. Now, my Lord, in order to understand the genesis of this proposal, I must ask the attention of the Council to the following passage in that Report. The Committee say :—

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

'In the middle of December the Punjab Government reported to the Government of India that the doings of the returned Sikh emigrants had more than anything else engaged official attention, that the majority of these had returned expecting to find India in a state of acute unrest and meaning to convert this unrest into a revolution. On the 19th of the same month the Provincial Government forwarded for consideration and orders by the Imperial Government, a draft Ordinance dealing with the prevention and suppression of violent crime. They asked for the very early promulgation of the Ordinance throughout the province.'

The letter of the Local Government summarised the situation, and it went on to say that the Lieutenant-Governor considered that 'it is most undesirable at the present time to allow trials of any of these revolutionaries or other sedition mongers who have been or may be arrested in the commission of crime or while endeavouring to stir up trouble to be protracted by the ingenuity of counsel and drawn out to inordinate length by the committal and appeal procedure which the criminal law provides'. His Honour, therefore, submitted for approval a draft Ordinance which provided, subject to the sanction of the Local Government to its application in these cases, '(a) for the elimination of the committal procedure in the case of offences of a political or quasi-political nature; (b) for the elimination of appeal in such cases; (c) for the taking of security from persons of the class affected by a more rapid procedure than that prescribed by the ordinary law; (d) for the prompt punishment of village officers and the finding of villagers colluding with and harbouring revolutionary criminals.'

"The Lieutenant-Governor included various offences against property in addition to seditious offences and acts punishable under the Arms and Explosives Act. But 'the measure was exceptional and intended to cope with a temporary emergency'. This was the basis upon which the Government of India, with great reluctance, as the Committee point out in paragraph 140 of the Report, agreed to pass the Defence of India Act. The Committee say :—

'The Government of India was reluctant to supersede in any degree the courts and processes of ordinary law. But both in the Punjab and in Bengal the situation was rapidly deepening in gravity. The Defence of India Act which substantially embodied the main provisions of the originally proposed draft Ordinance, was passed quickly through the Imperial Legislative Council. Its most important provisions were the appointment of special tribunals for the trial of revolutionary crimes. It allowed neither commitment proceedings to these tribunals nor judicial appeal from their decisions.'

"My Lord, the Defence of India Act thus was an enactment passed to meet the very special circumstances which came into existence owing to the war and which were effectively dealt with by the war measure which the Defence of India Act was. That the troubles were effectively dealt with by this enactment does not admit of doubt from the Report of the Committee. The question now before the Council is, whether there is anything in the present circumstances of the country which should justify the elimination of an appeal as the Bill proposes. I submit the circumstances in which the elimination of the provision for an appeal was asked for have ceased to exist. Besides an appeal stands on a different footing from a trial. The Government have secured the object that there should be a speedy trial of certain offences, by the sections which have been already agreed to by the majority of the Council. If a man, who has been convicted, is allowed to have an appeal to a higher tribunal, no conceivable injury can arise to any interest, public or private. On the very hypothesis of the case the man will be under restraint, having been convicted by the trial court; he will be in custody. There is no danger of the man spreading any mischief or creating any further trouble, and if an appeal is allowed, the appeal will not take a very long time. Even if it took a month or two or three months that will not be too long a period. But whatever the period may be, it will not affect any interest, public or private. On the other hand, the necessity for an appeal is patent, and should not require any argument in support of it before this Council. But unfortunately, as the Government have deliberately proposed to deprive persons who may be tried under this Part of the right of appeal, the point has to be argued. And, my Lord, all I would say is that too much stress has been laid on the fact that the Court will be constituted by three judges of the High Court and that confidence should be felt in the correctness of the judgment of three such judges. In the first place, my Lord, as my friend the mover of the amendment has pointed out, the decision to retain section 14 as it stands in the Bill is an important decision. It seeks to legalise again a provision which is repugnant to all ideas of justice which we have learned hitherto to appreciate and admire. It is repugnant to the rule that an accused person should have the right of doubt. It is a provision that has been agreed to deprives a man who may have the misfortune of being tried under this Part of the Act of that right in disregard of all considerations of justice and fair play. That makes it all the more necessary that there should be an appeal provided against a judgment passed in accordance with section 14. The proviso to clause 10 which has been accepted by the Government or rather proposed and agreed to by the Government, has secured that a sentence of death shall not be passed where the court is not unanimous regarding the guilt of the person tried. That is one safeguard, a very valuable safeguard, but that is only one safeguard. It does not deal with other sentences which, though they may not be the extreme sentence which the law can inflict upon a man, may be equally severe, and in some cases even more severe, than a sentence of death. For transportation or the taking away of a man for a very long period of years from those near and dear to him, from his surroundings, from his country, may be as painful, and sometimes even more painful to a man as being hanged. If there is no appeal provided, the result will be that a man may suffer the most severe punishment, the most serious and long deprivation of liberty at the hands of this tribunal, and yet he will have no remedy. My Lord, the three judges of the High Court who will form this prospective tribunal, will, after all, be human judges who are not infallible, and we should remember that the judgments of many judges of the High Court in this country, judgments pronounced by benches consisting of two High Court Judges have been upset on numerous occasions by the Privy Council. On numerous occasions judgments on questions of fact arrived at by two judges of High Courts have been set aside by the Privy Council. This has been so largely in civil cases. In one criminal case also which went up from Madras, the Privy Council upset the judgment of two judges of the High Court of Madras. But criminal cases involve also questions of law. The offences which the special tribunal will be called upon to deal with will be offences a decision relating to which will in many cases involve not merely questions of fact, but also questions of law, particularly offences relating to sedition—sections 124-A and 153-A. Now, my Lord, if experience has established that judgments of two judges of the High Courts have frequently been upset by judges of the Privy Council, if in England also in numerous cases judgments of first courts have been upset by the court of appeal, even by the House of Lords in appeal, does it not stand to reason that we should not place too much reliance on the circumstance that three judges of a High Court have dealt with a case? Will it not be wiser, more humane, more reasonable to provide an appeal so that the correctness of the judgment of the special court might be properly tested in a regular appeal? I submit, my Lord, that the case for accepting the amendment which has been moved is a very strong one. It hardly requires to be supported by authority. But there is the precedent of the Irish Act to which attention has been drawn. In that Act Parliament considered it necessary that there should be a provision for an appeal, though there also the trial was to be before three judges of the High Court. I draw attention to a passage from a speech by Sir William Harcourt who introduced that Bill, wherein he pointed out that, in order to create confidence in the system of trial which was provided in the Prevention of Crimes Act, the Government had taken care to provide important safeguards against injustice. He said :—

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

"The court will sit without a jury. They will decide the questions both of law and of fact, and their judgment will be unanimous. Well, then, in order to give every security and confidence to the trial, we give in all these cases an appeal to the Court of Criminal Cases

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

Reserved—I believe that is what it is called in Ireland. It is a body consisting of the residue of the judges of the Supreme Court. I believe that the ordinary quorum of that Court is five judges, and upon the appeal the judgment will be by a majority of the Court; so that you will see that no man can be convicted under these circumstances, without the assent of six judges—three in the Court below, and three in the Court above.

“The Council will note that the appeal court was to consist of five judges but it was provided that the determination of the appeal would be by the determination of the majority of the judges, a provision which Mr. Khaparde proposes should be introduced in the proposed amendment. My Lord, Sir William Harcourt pointed out that there was another security against error and injustice. I refer to it to show how anxious Parliament was that there should be every safeguard against injustice.

“Sir William Harcourt said :—

‘Well we have another security. There will be an official shorthand writer, and the notes will go to the Court above; but the Court above may, if they think fit, hear other evidence and call other witnesses; so that, in point of fact, at their discretion, they may have a re-hearing of the case; and thereupon the Court may either affirm the sentence of the Court below or they may alter the sentence,—that is to say, in the way of diminution or of increase.’

“Such was the care taken by Parliament in enacting a special procedure for the fair and impartial trial of those unfortunate persons who might be connected with or suspected of being connected with a certain class of crime in Ireland. My Lord, this Council is legislating in very different times, and I submit that it is very necessary that a provision for appeal should be included in the Bill.

“There is another aspect of the case to which I will draw attention: I have said that judgments of divisional benches of the High Courts have often been upset on points of fact. The Council will also remember that a judgment of at least one Tribunal constituted under the Defence of India Act at Lahore was upset by the Government of your Excellency's predecessor in an important case which came up before them. As I mentioned on a previous occasion, so far as I remember the facts, 24 persons were sentenced to death by that Tribunal. The Tribunal did not consist of High Court judges, but they were high judicial officers, one of them a district judge, and two others, and 24 persons were sentenced to death by that Tribunal. The persons so condemned made an application under section 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab rejected their applications. Then they applied to the Government of India, and the Government of India changed the sentences of death in the case of 17 persons to other sentences. It may be said that we may expect that a future Executive Government will also act similarly if circumstances will justify its doing so. But, my Lord, I would ask your Lordship and the Council to consider whether it is right, whether it is proper, to leave the decision of such important questions which affect the lives and liberties of individuals, to be disposed of by a Member of the Executive Government, assisted though he may be by his colleagues. It may happen that a particular Home Member may be more inclined to look into those voluminous cases that might come up as applications under section 401 than another; but it may also happen that a case may not be gone into with all the care, with all the consideration, that it may require. The Home Member, who must in the first instance deal with such cases, might feel that he ought not to sit in judgment upon three judges of the High Court who had dealt with these cases. If the matter is taken up, even before the Executive Council as a whole, I submit that is not a body which would be in a position to deal with the questions raised as an Appeal Court would be.

“For these reasons I submit, my Lord, that there should be a clear provision that from all judgments of the Special Court the persons convicted may appeal to a tribunal such as is proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde and the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda, and I hope that this amendment will receive the most serious consideration of the Government and that it will be adopted. If it is adopted, it will be a very important safeguard against injustice.

13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Sir William Vincent ; The President ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

Unfortunately, meet with the fate which most other amendments have met with, the Bill will stand, my Lord, much more objectionable than was the Bill of 1882."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, there are three Members, I think, who have amendments on this clause. It would save time if they are going to speak, that they should speak to them now."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My amendment stands on a somewhat different footing, my Lord, and I would like to reserve my remarks. I ask for a Court of Appeal only when there is a difference of opinion."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My amendment is also somewhat different. I ask for a Court of Appeal only in case of a death sentence."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Very well, my Lord. The Hon'ble Members are of course entitled to hold up their speeches until they like to make them."

I want first to refer to the recommendations of the Committee. They, being themselves judicial officers, state:—

Coming now to the measures themselves, we are of opinion that provision should be made for the trial of seditious crime by Benches of three Judges without juries or assessors and without preliminary commitment proceedings or appeal As regards the procedure and absence of right of appeal, we think it essential that the delay involved in commitment proceedings and appeal be avoided. It is of the utmost importance that punishment or acquittal should be speedy both in order to secure the moral effect which punishment should produce and also to prevent the prolongation of the excitement which the proceedings may set up.'

"It was with this object in view that they proposed a particularly strong Court of three High Court Judges. Moreover, they say 'As the right of appeal is taken away, the tribunal should be of the highest strength and authority.' The one object, therefore, that they had in view was to provide for a very strong Court and an expeditious trial. We have accepted those recommendations and I really can see no reason to reconsider the position that we have taken up. If it had been proposed to have an appeal in the ordinary way, we should not have taken the trouble to have selected a tribunal of three High Court Judges. It was for that reason that Judges of this standing were put on to the original Court. It is assumed that these trials will always be taking place in normal circumstances. I want to put it to the Council that this is really not so and that Part I of the Bill will only come into operation in abnormal circumstances and when revolutionary crime is dangerously prevalent, and then only in selected areas where urgent measures are necessary."

"It has been frequently said that this right of appeal is a fundamental right. Well, my Lord, I have never been able to understand why it is a fundamental right or anything of the kind. There is no right of appeal in many cases in this country, and there is certainly no right of appeal in England. If there was anything fundamental in it, there would be a right in all cases. The right, as I understand it, really arose from a suspicion as to the capacity of the Court of original jurisdiction and in order to avoid any danger arising from that source. Under the Bill we have created a Court, as I say, of the strongest character possible. I think really that three Judges of the High Court are a much stronger Court than any accused would get in an ordinary case before a Sessions Judge and assessors. In most cases an accused would be tried by a Sessions Judge and assessors, and subsequently

[Sir William Vincent; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.]

he would have a right of appeal, if convicted, to two High Court Judges; no appeal would be allowed further than that.

"Complaint has been made of particular cases which were tried under the Defence of India Act. Well, all I can say is that that was a point which I understand, the framers of the Report had in view when they proposed a stronger and better qualified tribunal than those which were constituted under that Act. I doubt very much whether Irish conditions can be accepted as a guide. The special courts there were constituted for very different reasons owing to the perversity of juries. Further, every man in Ireland was held to be acquitted unless he was convicted by the unanimous verdict of the jury, and for that reason when they changed the procedure, they put in further safeguards than have been customary in India.

"I would point out finally that the practical difficulties in the way of establishing a court of appeal would in my judgment be almost insuperable.

"The only other point to which I need advert is the suggestion made that a number of men were convicted wrongly in a particular case that was tried, I think, in Lahore, and that the remedies that exist at present for setting that error right are not provided under this Bill."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"I did not suggest that it would not exist. I suggested that it was not a sufficient or satisfactory remedy."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, if there was any mistake in the decision or the sentence in that case—a fact about which there is considerable room for doubt—the same remedy is preserved under the Bill as was given to those men, for a man will have the same right to petition for mercy under section 401 to the Local Government and then to the Governor General in Council, as in ordinary cases. The difference will be that instead of being tried by a tribunal under the Defence of India Act, he will be tried by a tribunal consisting of three High Court Judges; and I know of no case where the decision of three High Court Judges is open to appeal."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"My Lord, I venture to submit that in putting forward the case on behalf of the Government the Hon'ble the Home Member has not met a single one of the arguments that I ventured to submit in support of my motion. The first point taken by him was that this tribunal which the Bill sought to establish for the trial of these cases was a tribunal of very high standing. The tribunal may be a tribunal of very high standing, but what has that got to do with the question of taking away the right of appeal of the convict against the finding of such a tribunal? We know full well that these tribunals of high standing that the Hon'ble the Home Member has referred to have sometimes gone wrong, their judgments have had to be reversed by full benches of the very Court of which the Judges were members or by their Lordships of the Privy Council, or have been dissented from by judges of equally high standing in the other Provinces of India. Surely the mere fact that a person is a Judge of the High Court, or that a bench of the High Court consists of two or three Judges, is no guarantee of infallibility; and in the case of the trial of criminal cases of such grave importance as those which are mentioned in the Schedule, the mere fact that the Judges presiding over these tribunals are Judges of high standing is neither here nor there, so far as a man's right of appeal is concerned.

"Then the Hon'ble the Home Member said that this will be a High Court Judges constituting this bench. That is no answer at all."

which I put before the Council. Supposing of these three Judges two are in favour of conviction and one is in favour of acquittal, then how can you say that this tribunal consisting of three High Court Judges, not agreed on final verdict, is a tribunal whose opinion ought to be given the same weight as if the three Judges agreed in their final judgment? In such a case, that is to say, in case of a difference of opinion, you have only the opinion of one Judge—that is all; so that there is the opinion of one Judge against the opinion of two other Judges, and it is simply because there is in favour of the opinion of one other Judge that the accused is to be deprived of his right of appeal. It seems to me that this state of things is opposed to all principles of trial of criminal cases.

Then the Hon'ble the Home Member was pleased to say that there is no right of appeal in many cases in accordance with the law as it at present obtains in India. But so far as I am aware—and if I may venture to say so I am in a position to say that I know something about the law of appeal in criminal cases after 27 years' practice at the Bar—the Criminal Procedure Code deprives a convict of the right of appeal only in two classes of cases, one being of cases which may be tried summarily under a certain Chapter of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the second in cases where a Magistrate of the 1st class awards a punishment of imprisonment for less than a month or punishes merely with a fine below a certain amount. Well, the deprivation of the right of appeal in such cases is based on a particular ground. But even in these cases there is the power of revision in the High Court who can revise the sentence. So that in this Bill you propose to take away the right of revision of the High Court, you deprive the convict of his right of appeal—not in all cases, but in cases of a very serious nature—almost every offence specified in the Schedule is an offence of a very serious nature. So that this argument advanced by the Hon'ble the Home Member will not hold water for a single moment.

Then the Hon'ble the Home Member was pleased to say that a man charged with any of the offences mentioned in the Schedule would ordinarily be tried by a Sessions Judge, and then he would have an appeal to a division bench of the High Court consisting of two Judges. I cannot, with all deference to the Hon'ble the Home Member, see the point of this argument so far as the motion before the Council is concerned. No doubt he would, in the first instance, be tried by a Sessions Judge. But it must be remembered that he would be tried by a Sessions Judge with the assistance either of a jury or assessors, so that the Sessions Judge there will have the assistance of certain other persons also in coming to his conclusions. Then the accused person will have his appeal to the High Court, so that the case will have been heard by two distinct courts.

Here the case is heard only by one court and the decision of that one court is made final even in cases where the judges presiding over the court may differ in their opinion. So the two cases are not identical. Then the Hon'ble the Home Member told us that there would be difficulties in the establishment of a court of appeal. I for one cannot see any difficulty at all. Almost all the High Courts in India are of sufficient strength to permit of a court of appeal being constituted in order to hear an appeal against a special tribunal in these cases; and of course the final argument put forward that there is an appeal to mercy, that is to say, to Government, that of course . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I explain: I merely put forward that with reference to a particular remark made by the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"The Hon'ble the Home Member admits that this of course can be no substitute for a court of appeal, and therefore I need not press that part of my argument."

[Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi ; The President ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

I submit that the position which I took up in the first instance remains unanswered, and I therefore respectfully ask the Council to accept amendment."

The motion was put and the Council divided as follows :—

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" Yes, my Lord."
 The motion was put and negatived.

*That for clause 17 the following clause be substituted—

"17. (1) Any person convicted by a Special Tribunal under this Act may, subject to the provisions of this Act, appeal either against the conviction and sentence of the Court or against the sentence alone, to the Court of Criminal Appeal constituted under this Act, on any ground whether of law or of fact; and the Court of Criminal Appeal shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have power after hearing the appeal to confirm the conviction and sentence, or to enter an acquittal, or to vary the conviction or sentence. Provided that—

(a) the conviction shall not be varied save by substituting a conviction for some less offence, for which the Special Tribunal had jurisdiction on the trial to convict the appellant; and
 (b) the sentence shall not be increased.

(2) The conviction and sentence as confirmed or varied by the Court of Criminal Appeal shall have effect as if it were the conviction and sentence of the Special Tribunal, and shall be deemed to be the sentence of a Special Tribunal.

(3) If the appellant establishes want of jurisdiction in the Special Tribunal, the Court of Criminal Appeal may quash the proceedings.

(4) The Court of Criminal Appeal shall have for the purpose of any appeal the power of the High Court of the Special Tribunal.

13TH MARCH, 1919.] [The President; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

His Excellency the President:—"In that case Mr. Khaparde's amendment No. 34, which was put off,* also fails."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul's amendment to the following was not put owing to his absence:—

That for clause 17 the following clause be substituted:—

(1) The accused shall have the right of appeal on facts and on points of law to a Bench or Full Court of Judges of the High Court consisting of not less than five Judges each of whom has formed the Court which passed the sentence.

In case the High Court does not consist of five Judges excluding the Judges who formed the Bench or Full Court the Appellate Court shall consist of Judges of the High Court exercising jurisdiction in the area and some other High Court with the consent of the Chief Justice of the latter.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I beg leave—

That to clause 17 the following be added:—

Provided that where the decision of the Court is that of a majority of the Judges sitting at the trial an appeal shall lie to a Full Bench consisting of not less than five Judges of the High Court and where the High Court consists of a smaller number of Judges than five the appeal shall be transferred to a High Court consisting of five or more Judges.

The reason why I ask that this should be separately put is that it stands higher and somewhat different footing from the amendments which have just disposed of. I do not ask for a right of appeal in cases where three Judges constituting a tribunal are unanimous in convicting the accused. It might be said that inasmuch as the accused has the benefit of a specially strong tribunal consisting of three High Court Judges, there is nothing unfair in depriving him of the ordinary right of appeal to which he would be entitled under the ordinary procedure. But, my Lord, the same cannot be said where there is a difference of opinion between the Judges on the vital question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. I, therefore, submit that although Government might not have been able to see eye to eye with the amendments on the previous question, they might be pleased to consider as to whether at least in those cases where there is a majority judgment alone a right of appeal should not be conferred, and I have one or two other strong reasons to urge in favour of my proposition; one is although these offences are triable before a special tribunal on the ground that they are connected with anarchical or revolutionary crime, we know from the tenor of the discussion that has preceded that the courts are not to adjudicate as to whether the offences are really connected with revolution or anarchy. So we are to take it from the Local Government's decision that the tribunals will have jurisdiction over offences unconnected with this revolutionary or anarchical movement, although it may be proved clearly that those offences are unconnected with anarchical or revolutionary movements when once the machinery is started.

"Therefore is it right, I would ask, that the accused in such a case should be deprived of the ordinary rights simply because it so happens that the machinery was moved owing it may be to a mistake of the Local Government's or the officer who advised them on questions of fact as to whether an offence was connected with a revolutionary movement or not? The third point is that as the Schedule stands it need not be anarchical or revolutionary movement. It may only be a case where the safety of the State is considered to be affected by reason, it may be, of factious fights between two sections of the community. I put it to the Council whether it is fair that these persons should be brought within the purview of this Act in this manner and that they should be deprived of the right of appeal which they would have had otherwise. It would be cruel if hundreds of persons had to undergo long terms of imprisonment or transportation because the Government or the official who advised them was of opinion that their offences were connected with the safety of the State. As regards invulnerability of the Judges, there was only recently a case which was sent to the Privy Council when their Lordships were of opinion that the man should not have been convicted. The Privy Council differed from the High Court entirely, and their judgment shows that evidence of a particular nature should not have been admitted. After all Judges are liable to error like others, they do not vary in any considerable degree from others, and they should not be elevated to the position of gods in the Hindu mythology. We are reminded constantly of the Rowlatt's Committee Report as if that Report has the sanction of the Vedas, the Bible or the Koran. We are constantly told that the Committee said this or that, could there be any greater authority? We have here a tribunal of three Judges, could there be anything better? These arguments are entitled to some respect, but I think too much has been made of them. These ancient creeds, which have supported doctrines which modern science has taught us it is not quite safe to follow, have been implicitly followed for ages, but are now beginning to be questioned. I think that too much reliance should not be placed on these reports and that on points where the Judges differ a right of appeal should be allowed, and I hope the Government will give way here. As regards the second part, it was said that there was some practical difficulty in the way of constituting an appellate tribunal; the Government have heard what can be said against the proposition, and I hope that there will be no insuperable objections to transferring the appeal to a High Court where there are more than five Judges. It is provided for that in the second part of that resolution and I trust that the principle of the first part will be accepted."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Pāndit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I have shown that it was on the recommendation of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab that there was no provision for an appeal in the rules made under the Defence of India Act. So far as the Rowlatt Committee are concerned, all that they say on the subject is as follows :—

' As regards the procedure and the absence of right of appeal, we think it essential that the delay involved in commitment proceedings and appeal be avoided. It is of the utmost importance that punishment or acquittal should be speedy, both in order to secure the moral effect which punishment should produce, and also to prevent the prolongation of the excitement which the proceedings may set up.'

" I submit that the argument is singularly weak when it is applied to an appeal. The delay of a month or two which an appeal may involve, in actually inflicting the punishment which has been ordered cannot reduce its moral effect. Nor is the apprehension that any excitement caused by the proceedings might be prolonged till the pendency of the appeal entitled to serious consideration. Whatever value there may be in this argument, it would apply to the proceedings in the trial court, but would not apply at any rate to an equal degree to the proceedings in appeal. For these reasons I hope that the Government may yet see their way to accept this amendment. May be, I am hoping against hope. But we cannot abandon the hope that the life or liberty of a fellow-subject will not be taken away without giving him the opportunity of having his case considered by a court of appeal. It is not right that such drastic provisions as the Bill contemplates should be enacted without the safeguards so necessary to guard against miscarriages of justice."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I can add very little to what I said last time on this matter. I will draw attention to the conditions under which this Part of the Act will come into operation. It is this :— If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that in any part of British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are taking place, and that scheduled offences in connection with such movements are being committed to such an extent that it is expedient in the interest of the safety of

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

provide for the speedy trial of such offences'. In these circumstances, and in the circumstances alone, will this Part come into operation. It is in circumstances of that character that we seek to have one expeditious and final appeal before the best tribunal that we can introduce."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—My Lord, I 12-13 A.M. have my amendment which runs as follows:—

That the following further proviso be added to clause 17:—

Provided further that—

- (a) The accused shall have the right of appeal both on facts and on points of law from a capital sentence to a full bench or full court of Judges of the High Court, consisting of not less than five Judges, none of them having formed the Court which passed such sentence. In case there are not five Judges in the High Court, excluding the Judges who passed the sentence, the Appellate Bench shall be formed of Judges of the High Court in question and some other High Court with the consent of the Chief Justice of the latter; and
- (b) On a point of law being reserved by the Court on application by the defence or on a certificate being granted by the Advocate-General attached to the High Court concerned, and in cases where there is no such Advocate-General, on a certificate by any Advocate-General, the matter shall be considered by such full bench or full courts composed as aforesaid.

"My Lord, the Council will see that the request I make here is still more limited than that of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma. First I confine my request only to the case of capital sentence. Now here I think I can appeal to the Hon'ble the Home Member to legitimately follow what he himself is pleased to concede in reference to sentences of death when there is no unanimity among Judges. He accepted the amendment that when the Judges are not unanimous regarding the guilt of the accused, the sentence of death shall not be passed. But, my Lord, there is yet another case. Supposing the Judges are agreed about the guilt of the accused but are not agreed upon the sentence to be passed, two are for death sentence and one for transportation. In that case, my Lord, it is necessary that we should take this case into consideration, and the only thing to do is to refer the appeal to a full bench. I, therefore, appeal, my Lord, to the Hon'ble the Home Member at least to accept this portion. I leave it to him to decide what the composition of the Court should be.

"Then the second part of my amendment is this:—

'On a point of law being reserved by the Court on application by the defence or on a certificate being granted by the Advocate-General attached to the High Court concerned, and in cases where there is no such Advocate-General, on a certificate by any Advocate-General, the matter shall be considered by such Full Bench or Full Courts composed as aforesaid.'

"My Lord, on a former occasion on a complaint of my Hon'ble friend Pandit Malaviya that by this Bill you are taking away the right of appeal, the Hon'ble the Law Member remarked that this right of appeal in criminal cases did not exist in High Court's decisions. This is what he said, my Lord:—

'There is no appeal in a criminal case in India where the case has been tried in the High Court in a criminal session. There is no appeal, then, why? Why have we adopted in India from very early times the right of appeal in criminal cases from the district courts, from mofussil judges, but not where the case is tried in the sessions of the High Court? We have juries in the districts just as much. But there is no appeal from a criminal trial in the High Court because of the higher status of the Judges.'

"Then I interrupted the Hon'ble Member and asked him if it was not practically an appeal from decisions of a High Court on a certificate by the Advocate-General or on a point of law reserved? And the Hon'ble the Law Member replied as follows:—

'I am afraid my Hon'ble friend is not quite correct. He will, no doubt, remember the Lett. Patent. It reads thus: I am reading from the Calcutta one:— that there shall be no appeal to the High Court of Judicature from any sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial before the Courts of original jurisdiction which may be constituted by one or more Judges of the said High Court. But it shall be at the discretion of any such Court to reserve any point or points of law, for the opinion of the said High Court.'

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

"Now leaving this part alone, my Lord, from what was said on the occasion, I think I may infer that if I can show that there is some power of appeal or revision from a decision of the High Court, he will be pleased to allow it in this case also. His ground was, there is no right of appeal from the decision of the High Court, and therefore we cannot grant a right of appeal in this also. I shall show now that we can have an appeal practically though in name revision to a Full Bench in two cases, first where there is a point of law reserved by the court at the request of the defence; and secondly where there is a certificate by the Advocate-General. Now the portion which the Hon'ble the Law Member read out the other day was clause 25 of the Letters Patent. There is clause 26 which he did not read and which says:—

'And we do further ordain that, on such point or points of law being so reserved as aforesaid, or on its being certified by the said Advocate-General that in his judgment, there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the court of original criminal jurisdiction, or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the said Court, shall be further considered, the said High Court shall have full power and authority to review the case or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such point or points of law, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the court of original jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment and sentence as to the said High Court shall seem right.'

Therefore, my Lord, you will see that there are two sets of circumstances under which even a decision of the High Court in a criminal case is liable to be reviewed by the High Court. There are many cases, my Lord, which I have cited in support of my contention, and I shall place before the Council a very well-known case which has an important bearing on the point in question. There is a case reported in I. L. R. XVII, Calcutta, page 642, Queen Empress vs. O'Hara. In this case two soldiers of the Leinster Regiment were put up for trial on a charge of murder. The case was tried by Justice Norris and a special Jury of Europeans. The jury found O'Hara guilty and sentence of death was pronounced upon him. Thereafter the Advocate-General gave a certificate that there was an error of law and the matter was referred to a Full Bench. Then what did the Court do? I will read the last portion of the judgment of the Full Bench:—

'In the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to deal with the argument for the prosecution as to the powers of the court acting under section 26 of the Charter. We take it to be clear that in case of misdirection such as this and of improper reception of evidence such as took place in the present case, this Court may and ought to exercise its power of review.'

"Then, after delivering the judgment, the Court (the Judges forming the Full Bench) sat to deal with the case on the evidence as it appeared from the notes of Mr. Justice Norris. Then the Court on the evidence quashed the conviction and set aside the conviction and sentence.

"What is it, my Lord, if not an appeal? Therefore, my Lord, the Hon'ble the Law Member was not correct in saying that there is no appeal from the decision of a High Court. I submit, my Lord, I do not ask for more than this. Let us have the same power, that is with regard to the decision of the High Court here. I therefore submit, my Lord, that if we can find that there is a point of law reserved in a case or if we can get a certificate from any Advocate-General that there is an error in the judgment, such a case ought to be reviewed by a Full Bench. That is my submission, and the Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya has fully explained the matter from our point of view. In the case decided by the Madras High Court and quoted by the Hon'ble Pandit and mentioned by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, I think I could mention another fact in this connection, that in this case the Privy Council not only set aside the judgment of the Madras High Court, but that decision they overruled the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court which is reported in I. L. R. 27, Calcutta. Therefore, my Lord, two judges, but the decisions of five judges have been overruled by the Privy council. I submit in a case like this where we are taking away every privilege possessed by persons under ordinary trial, it is very essential that this privilege at any rate ought to be conceded. I ask the Hon'ble the Home Member to consider this matter and allow my amendment to go forward."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"The arguments, my Lord, and earnestness with which Mr. Chanda has presented them are such that they might melt the heart of anybody, and if I were a judge and he were to appear before me, I think he would win most of his cases; but I feel that the Government is sitting there hardhearted, absolutely determined not to yield. Nothing is to move Government in the matter of these amendments. Amendment No. 1 has been moved and been rejected. I am beginning to think, my Lord, at the end of these two days, whether it is not a sheer waste of public time that these amendments should be formally talked about in this fashion and rejected. Perhaps it would be better, my Lord, in the interests of public time if the Government declared once for all that these are the small minor amendments of yours which we are prepared to accept; as to the rest we have made up our mind and therefore, if you like to go on you can go on, but we have got the majority and they are going to be rejected. If that were declared, it would save a lot of time and put an end to this agony—it must be an agony to the Government; certainly it is an agony to me, to sit here and see this mockery of debate going on for two days and every amendment is rejected. Now, my Lord, what is the position? The position is this. We are told in the instance that the Governor General in Council will notify that this Part I is to be applied to a particular area. The Governor General in Council is to decide as to the revolutionary movements according to the dictionary meaning. Very well, granted. And we are told that the Local Government will then apply to the High Court for a special tribunal, and we are told that when that tribunal is constituted, it is going to be governed by special rules of evidence, and procedure not normal rules of evidence, not normal rules of procedure, but extraordinary rules of procedure, and certainly abnormal rules of evidence. Then we are told that this tribunal can sit in camera in effect. Then we are told that this tribunal will have no jurisdiction to go into the question whether a crime with which a person is charged is connected with revolutionary movement or anarchical movement. Then we are told that the judgment of that tribunal shall be final and no appeal shall lie. Then we are told that even if there is a difference of opinion, no appeal shall lie. Now, my Lord, we come to the last straw. There is enough to break the camel's back, and that last straw is, will you or will you not agree to a higher tribunal as a corrective, as a revisional tribunal? I quite agree with the Hon'ble the Law Member that the Bill does not give the right of appeal, but it gives the right of revision. When the higher tribunal revises it has got the right of review, and I think Mr. Chanda was a little confused on that point. In reviewing it may go into the whole case, but there is a distinction between the right of appeal and the right of revision, and so to that extent the Hon'ble Member is correct, but what Mr. Chanda is asking for is revision and are you going to deny that also? On what ground? Because the Rowlatt Committee has said so? But, my Lord, is the Government of India going to surrender its judgment to the Rowlatt Committee? Is the Council going to surrender its judgment as a whole to the Rowlatt Committee? Surely, my Lord, this Rowlatt Committee has not acquired that sanctity and that infallibility. I ask the Government still to consider this. We know that in cases of a trumpety character, of a civil nature, to the amount of Rs10,000 of property value, you can appeal against the judgment of the High Court judge who tries it, and we have known times out of number when there were questions of law, and there were full benches of three and five judges on trumpety civil questions involving more than Rs10,000 which were taken to the Privy Council. Well, my Lord, when a question of Rs10,000 is involved you have got these rights, but where you have a question of life and death, where you have laws of an exceptional character which are extraordinary procedure, of ordinary principles of law and justice, intended for a special peculiar case, are you going to be hard to deny to that criminal, as Mr. Sastri very well put it the other day, even the opportunity to carry his case as far as he can and prove his innocence if he can. Why should that revision right be denied to him? Under the ordinary Criminal Procedure Code in cases of trumpery character—now I am talking of criminal cases—what do you find? An order is made by the Magistrate, an appeal is carried to the Sessions Court and it is carried to the High Court. You have three benches of three courts dealing with that case and the object of it is not that the High Court Judges are eminent lawyers and therefore it is a very good bench and therefore you do not want another bench. I do not for a moment say that even a revision court is infallible. Of course if you go on arguing like this there is no finality, but the important question is this, that if you have one tribunal that has decided a particular question and you have an appeal or a revision, you have a different tribunal that brings its mind afresh to bear upon that particular case, and that is the importance of having a second tribunal. They may be all High Court Judges, but you have a different tribunal. My Lord, I do not wish to keep the Council any more at this late hour, but I really do press this upon you that you should, in fairness even to these revolutionaries, these anarchists against whom you feel so bitterly, and I assure you I feel equally bitterly, give them a fair chance and let them have at least the revision."

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah ; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru.]

12-34 A.M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"My Lord, it seems to me that the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda is, in one material respect, very different from the amendments which we have been considering this morning. My Lord, the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda wants that in capital cases the accused shall have the right of appeal both on facts and on points of law, and, in so far as his amendment is confined to cases of capital sentence, it has a great deal in its favour which distinguishes it from the preceding amendments. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Jinnah has very emphatically pointed out that you allow the right of appeal in cases not only of a civil nature, but also of a criminal nature, and it does not seem at all to stand to reason that in a case where there is a question of life and death you should say that the judgment of the trying Court must have finality about it.

"My Lord, have we not known cases tried by some of the most eminent Judges of the High Courts in which their judgments have been upset by their own colleagues or by the Privy Council? It is perfectly true that the Privy Council does not, as a matter of course, entertain appeals in criminal matters, but during the last 6 or 7 years we know that some cases have gone to the Privy Council from the Madras High Court and the Central Provinces and, I believe, one other Court, and we find that the Privy Council have had some very unpleasant things to say of some of the most eminent Judges of the High Courts in India.

"My Lord, it seems to me that in depriving an accused person in cases of this character of the right of appeal you are taking away a great deal from the professions with which this Bill has been introduced into this Council. I feel very strongly on this subject, and I would remind the Council that the importance of these capital sentences has been recognised by this Council itself in a preceding amendment to-day, I refer to the amendment which asked for a unanimous judgment in capital cases. Well, you may have a unanimous judgment in capital cases, and yet that unanimous judgment may be open to question.

"Well, my Lord, it seems to me that, so far as Part I of this Bill is concerned, it stands on a very different footing from the remaining Parts of the Bill. It seeks to conform itself as much as possible to judicial procedure, and unless you mean to depart from well-settled principles of criminal law in India, it seems to me that there is absolutely no reason why a person who knows that his life is at stake should not have the satisfaction of having his case taken his case before an appellate Court."

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[*Sir William Vincent ; Mr. M. A. Jinnah ;
Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Mr. V. J. Patel.*]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, the first part of this amendment deals with the question of a right of appeal from a capital sentence. Now, when the question of capital sentences first came under consideration, I accepted the view that the three Judges forming the members of the tribunal should be unanimous as to the guilt of the accused before a capital sentence was pronounced, and that, I think, goes sufficiently far. Where you have three Judges all satisfied as to the guilt of the accused I cannot see why a further appeal is needed. If an accused were ordinarily prosecuted for a crime, who are the authorities before whom he would go? He would go first to a Sessions Judge assisted by assessors, and after that before two High Court Judges

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"May I rise to a point of order? The Hon'ble the Home Member is not quite right there. In the City of Bombay a case can go to a Full Bench of the High Court even from a Judge of the High Court assisted by a jury."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"The Hon'ble Member is quite right as regards Bombay City, but there are many other parts of India where the position would be as I say, and in such cases one Sessions Judge and two High Court Judges would be all the judicial authorities who would examine the records. Under the system that we propose at least three High Court Judges would have heard the evidence. Of course it may be said that these Judges might make mistakes. Well so might any Court; the Full Bench is equally likely to make mistakes; there is no certainty about this in any court. We have just been told of a certain appeal to the Privy Council against a decree of a Full Bench. I remember the case. It was a case of misjoinder of charges. You cannot get any finality by allowing an appeal to a Full Bench, but we say that by providing a strong tribunal and by further providing that in any death sentence the Judge must be unanimous as to the guilt of the accused, we think we have done all that is necessary to meet the abnormal circumstances in which this Part of the Bill will be used."

"It is very late, my Lord, and there is only one other matter to which I wish to refer, and that is the statement of the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah that all amendments put forward are neglected

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"I said all important ones."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I suggest to the Hon'ble Member that that is scarcely fair after the modifications made in the Bill, I may cite one which was made just before dinner, when a very important amendment proposed by an Hon'ble Member was accepted in this Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I have not heard a word from the Hon'ble the Home Member about the second part of my amendment, namely, 'when a certificate has been obtained from the Advocate General'."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 17 stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 18 as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause 18 the following clause be substituted:—
'Conditions specified under section 112 of the Code may, in the circumstances specified in the Code, be taken into consideration at the trial of an accused under this Part.'

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.]

51 is a misprint for 512. The amendment, my Lord, amounts to this, that I want to retain sub-clause (2) of clause 18 and I want the Council to drop the first sub-clause. The first sub-clause is this :—

‘18. (1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, where—

- (a) the statement of any person has been recorded by a Magistrate, and such statement has been read over and explained to the person making it and has been signed by him, or

such statement may be admitted in evidence by the Court if the person making the same is dead or cannot be found or is incapable of giving evidence, and it is established to the satisfaction of the Court that such death, disappearance or incapacity has been caused in the interests of the accused.’

“Now, my Lord, the position is this. You have, for the trial of certain offences, a specially constituted tribunal. This tribunal is not empowered to go into the question whether the alleged offence is connected with any revolutionary movement or not. In fact, the tribunal has to take as a matter of course the finding of the Local Government on that question. Secondly, that tribunal, even though it is not unanimous, is bound to convict the accused according to the majority finding. Thirdly, whether the finding is unanimous or by majority the accused has no right of appeal. There are no commitment proceedings, there is no jury, and on the top of all this you have provisions for special rules of evidence. It is for you to accept these provisions or not.”

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—“ My Lord, I support the amendment, and I do so for this reason, that the statement referred to in sub-clause (b) of the section will be a statement of a person which has been recorded by the Court. That means a statement recorded in the proceedings of the case, and in my opinion that is the utmost limit to which the Council might go, in admitting a statement which has not been subjected to cross-examination. In Act XIV of 1908, the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908, section 13 laid down that ‘the evidence of a witness taken by a Magistrate in proceedings to which Part I of that Act applied, would be treated as evidence before the High Court if the witness were dead or could not be produced, and if the High Court had reason to believe that his death or absence had been caused in the interests of the accused.’ The statement was, therefore, one made in the course of the proceedings of the case under trial. Sub-clause (a) of section 18 goes much beyond that. It would admit ‘the statement of any person which has been recorded by a Magistrate and such statement has been read over and explained to the person making it and has been signed by him.’ I submit there is no justification for going even beyond the provision of the Act of 1908. For this reason I support the amendment.”

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—“ My Lord, I have a somewhat similar amendment, asking that the first clause, the whole of it, be omitted altogether, and my reason for sending in that amendment was that I have not been able to discover any authority for this provision in any published law book or Code. It is rather a difficult situation. I do not like to say it and yet I feel I must say it—as some of my practice has been to plead such cases and my experience has been that it is not really the accused but those people who are against the accused that procure the absence of witnesses. The difficulty of bringing home offences of this kind is so great that even Government feels it, as this whole legislation shows ; and unfortunately the accused stands in very great danger of being run in by his enemies. So this first part, apart from its not being supported by any authority, is also open to this danger, that a witness may have said something, or made some statement, which will not stand up to prove in cross-examination, and the man is made to [13TH MARCH, 1919.] [*Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Sir William Vincent ;

if accused. Now what evidence can be brought for that kind of thing? It will ultimately depend on the skill of the lawyers on either side. As we know, no case is bad. It all depends on who is defending it. A strong man defending a bad case may carry it, while a weaker man, not commanding eloquence, may be able to carry a true proposition; but in that case it comes to be that bad evidence is accepted against the accused, and there is serious danger sometimes of his being hanged on the strength of it. I, therefore, propose that this first clause be altogether omitted from this section."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, the clause in 12-14 A.M. question is based on paragraph 185 of the report itself, where it is said that it is essential that the protection of important witnesses and the perpetuation of their testimony should be provided for. The Committee go on to say that they think that the evidence of dead or absent witnesses should be made available for use by the court—(1) statements made to a police officer not below the rank of Superintendent, and (2) statements made at the trial and not yet cross-examined upon. Well, we found on looking into this matter that it was impossible to include statements made to police officers, because the statements mentioned in the report have to be signed and the Criminal Procedure Code, as Members of this Council are well aware, prohibits police officers from taking the signatures of persons examined on documents of this kind. Therefore, no statement to a police officer is included in the Bill which is now before the Council. But we think it is reasonable that statements made to Magistrates and witnesses who are subsequently murdered by co-conspirators of the accused, kept out of the way, should be admissible in evidence quantum valeant. We must suggest that these statements will have the same value as the statements of witnesses who have been cross-examined. If the records of these conspiracy cases are read, or even if this Report is read, it will be seen what desperate efforts are made by these revolutionaries to attempt to get rid of any man who attempts to give assistance to the authorities or give evidence against them. I think many of us yesterday were much struck by the instances that the Hon'ble Mr. Emerson gave to this Council on this matter. One of the devices of these revolutionaries is to murder persons whose statements have been recorded before their cross-examination, in the hope that that may prevent these statements being used as evidence. Directly they know a person has made any statement, then attempts are made on his life. In fact, we have been told quite definitely that the lives of any informants to the police or Magistrate are known to be forfeit.

"I have got two cases here in which persons who had given evidence to the authorities were murdered immediately after doing so; and it will interest Council to know that on an inquiry made from Bengal I find that the total number of informers or supposed informers murdered has been no less than 20. We do not, however, see, why the accused person should benefit by the fact that a witness is murdered, as I say, either by the person himself or at his instigation or by co-conspirators with him. It is to remove the temptation for murdering these witnesses, that this clause is enacted. I must oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—"When the Bill was introduced, my Lord, I think I referred to this point as an objectionable one, and on that occasion the Hon'ble the Law Member seemed to take it that it was the gravest objection that I had raised. I think he said that, but unfortunately I think he did not hear what I said. Undoubtedly that was one. My first objection was on principle. My second objection was that it would create a trial within a trial. That was not the only objection. On that occasion the Hon'ble the Law Member said this (I am quoting from his speech): 'I think my Hon'ble friend forgot that possibly it was an unwise thing to argue that in an assembly which contains so many lawyers.' My Lord, he said 'in an assembly which contains an able Law Member' and therefore that it was unwise on my part to argue, forgetting that there was an able Law Member, I would acknowledge that. But I do not know what the suggestion means. Does the suggestion mean, my Lord, that I forgot that I should be found out in this Council? Because I am sure that even a minor lawyer of a few years' standing, much less an able law member, is acquainted with section 33. Now my Lord, we know what section 33 is, and why I emphasise this point that it will create a trial within a trial is for this reason that more value will be attached to statements which are not subjected to the conditions laid down in section 33 than to statements and evidence which have gone through the requisite conditions laid down in section 33. Under section 33 you first of all have the evidence of a man who has given evidence in proceedings where the parties are there or their representatives. He is cross-examined and when a man is cross-examined there would not be the same trouble to him in the evidence of a man who has already been cross-examined because he has gone through the test and therefore there would not be that temptation as there would be in a case where the man has made a statement behind the back of the other party and that statement is produced in court and tendered as evidence not subjected to the test of cross-examination, which after all is the greatest possible test of truth. If you can possibly find out whether a man is telling the truth or not, you can only do it by cross-examination and not otherwise. Under those circumstances I impress upon the Government and those who are responsible for this Bill that you will have much greater chance, more likelihood of there being a trial within a trial, and I will illustrate my point in one word. Suppose I am right to this extent, that the police themselves are very anxious to get in the statements of X, Y and Z without putting them forward to the test of cross-examination, because they are greatly afraid that if these men are cross-examined they will break down. Well, the natural thing for them to do is to say to the court 'X, Y and Z have made their statements. They have been spirited away by the accused; we cannot produce them.' 'Oh!' says the court 'It satisfied me.' We know, and I can say with a certain amount of confidence, that you can always get two or three witnesses who will come forward and tell a story which will prima facie satisfy the court that, we will say, X was seen with the accused on the day previous—somebody will come and say that; also that Y was seen with the accused on the day he was leaving the station and is not to be found, and that Z was last seen in the company of a brother of the accused and cannot be found. Well, what is the accused to say to that? What answer has the accused to give? he can only say he knows nothing about it; and what will the court do? The Court will say 'I have got three witnesses and these three witnesses say that X, Y, and Z were seen either in the company of the accused or a relation of the accused just a day or two before and they are not to be found any more.' I say that would be quite enough to induce the court to admit the evidence. Then I quite appreciate the point of the Hon'ble the Law Member. He says 'Of course that might make out a case for admitting the evidence, but what value is to be attached to it is a different point.' I quite appreciate it; it is perfectly true. The Court may not be misled by that evidence. But notwithstanding that, may I point out—and I am sure the Hon'ble the Home Member who has himself been a Judge and knows better than I do because I am sure that he has dealt with more criminal cases than I have, as a Sessions Judge and as a District Judge—does it or does it not leave some impression on your mind if ex parte statements are admitted? Would you or would you not begin to wonder perhaps that they are true? Will they or will they not affect you? Further, may I point out to the Hon'ble the Home Member who has got the experience of having tried these cases as a Judge that if these stories are concocted, they are so cleverly concocted that even a very shrewd judge may fall into the snare and take them to be true? Therefore, my Lord, I submit that. I know there is a similar provision in the Act of 1908, and probably that will be trotted out and I shall be told that there is such a provision already. My answer is that two black does not make one white; that is my answer; and the fact that you have already a similar provision in another Act and you have already committed one blunder, does not warrant that you should commit the same blunder again. That is all that I have to say.

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah.]

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir George Lowndes ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, this is no time 1-4 A.M. day or night for legal dialectics. I propose to answer what my Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah said in a very few words. I do not suppose there is anybody in the Council who does not know as well as he does that evidence that has been cross-examined is not of the same weight as evidence that has not been cross-examined to. The question is not as to the weight which should be attached to such evidence, but whether it should be admissible under this Bill. Then there was the suggestion that the police might keep a witness in the way and then come to the three High Court Judges, as my learned friend said, and would try and persuade them on the evidence of two or three witnesses that they had been spirited away by the accused.

" Well, I have some experience of courts, and I have listened to plenty of members of my profession trying to convince one high court judge of something of this sort. But in this case they would have to convince three High Court judges. Do they think that High Court Judges are fools? It is really absurdity. Therefore I say that no answer of any sort has been made to the point by my Hon'ble and learned friend."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Much has been made as regards a similar provision in the Criminal Law Amendment Act. The provision in that Act is on altogether different grounds and under different circumstances. There is a magisterial inquiry there, here there is no magisterial inquiry. It is there laid down that—

' Notwithstanding anything contained in section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, the evidence of any witness taken by a magistrate in proceedings to which this Part applies shall be treated as evidence before the High Court if the witness is dead or cannot be produced and if the High Court has reason to believe that his death or absence has been caused in the interests of the accused.'

" Under this Bill there will be no magisterial enquiry."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" I beg to move my amendment which runs as follows :—

' That sub-clause (1) of clause 18 be deleted.'

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to withdraw my amendment—

' That in clause 18 (1) for the word 'statement' wherever it occurs the word 'evidence' be substituted and after the words 'of the court' the words 'by the sworn testimony of witnesses whom the accused will have the right of cross-examining' be inserted.'

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I formally move my amendment—

' That in clause 18 (1) sub-clause (a) and the letter and brackets (b) be deleted.'

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I oppose the amendment for the reasons I have already given."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move that to clause 18 the following proviso be added—

' Provided that the accused had the right and opportunity to cross-examine such person mentioned in sub-clause (1) (a). Provided further that the accused shall have the right of calling witnesses to disprove the allegation that the death or disappearance or incapacity has been caused in the interests of the accused.'

[Sir William Vincent; Sir George Lowndes; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [13TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" So far as this amendment deals with the question of an accused having the right to disprove allegations that the death or disappearance or incapacity of a witness had been caused in the interest of the accused I do not doubt that the accused has the right to do so. It is the ordinary right to produce rebutting evidence. As to the other part of the amendment I have already explained why it is impossible to limit the application of the section to cases in which the witness has been cross-examined. The fact is that these young revolutionaries often murder witnesses before cross-examination was recorded with the deliberate object of preventing statements being used in evidence. If cross-examinations were a precedent to the admission of these statements in evidence the new Bill would give us very little more in it than is contained in clause 33 of the Evidence Act. I am afraid, therefore, I must oppose the motion."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 18 as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 19 as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" Perhaps the Hon'ble Member will allow me to say a few words and I may be able to meet him on this amendment. I don't think he means what he says in his amendment :—

' Provided nevertheless that the accused shall have the right to claim a de novo trial if any judge not having been present throughout the trial finds him guilty.'

" I do not think my Hon'ble friend means that the accused can go on to the end of the trial and take his chance, and if found guilty then ask for a trial de novo. I think what he wants is that where there has been a change in the constitution of the Court it shall be open to the accused to have an order that the witnesses be recalled. We might put it in as a substantive clause and not as a part of clause 19 which is a rule-making power. It might provide that if there is a reconstitution of the court during the trial the accused shall be entitled to demand that the witnesses or any of them shall be recalled and re-heard."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" I accept that."

The following motion was put and agreed to—

' That after clause 18 a substantive clause be inserted to the effect that in case of any reconstitution of the Court during the trial the accused shall have the right to demand that the witnesses shall be re-summoned and re-heard.'

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move that in sub-clause (2) of clause 19 after the words ' custody of the accused,' the words ' and his release on bail ' be added within the bracket.

The intention of the amendment is quite evident, and it does not require any explanation. "

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I am quite prepared to accept this amendment."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The motion that clause 19 as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

[13TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Sir William Vincent. ; The President.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move that the following new clauses be inserted :—

1-15 A.M.

19-A. The Government shall provide for the payment of the reasonable expenses in the case of poor persons charged with murder or sedition for the payment of Counsel required for the defence of a person brought for trial before the Special Court and certified to be so required by such Court.

19-B. The Court shall have the power to award any amount which seems proper to the Court as compensation to the accused when it acquits him and finds that there was no reasonable ground for prosecuting him, such compensation being payable by Government if the Court directs otherwise :

Provided that the award of compensation and receipt thereof by the accused shall be a bar to any suit for damages which the accused may have the right to institute for false and malicious prosecution but in decreeing any damages in such suit, if any, such amount paid as aforesaid shall be deducted '.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I will deal with the question of the new clauses which the Hon'ble Member proposes, to insert, 19-A. The position is this, that Government does provide by the rules payment of legal advisers to persons charged with murder who are unable to pay for Counsel for themselves and the same rule will apply in the case of trials under this Part. I do not exactly know what offence the Hon'ble Member refers to as sedition unless it is an offence under section 124-A. But I submit to the Council that any person accused of an offence under section 124-A is not entitled to any more consideration than an ordinary criminal. Nor indeed is there any section of offence of sedition pure and simple."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, the only point is that in cases of sentences for life, all reasonable expenses may be paid. That is why I want these clauses to be inserted."

1-18 A.M.

The motion was put and negatived.

The Council then adjourned till Friday the 14th at 11 A.M.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.
LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Friday, the 14th March, 1919.

PRESENT :

His Excellency BARON CHELMSFORD, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., G.C.M.G., G.C.B.E., Viceroy and Governor General, presiding, and 61 Members, of whom 53
were Additional Members.

CRIMINAL LAW (EMERGENCY POWERS) BILL—contd.

His Excellency the President:—"I think, it may be for the convenience of Hon'ble Members if I state that I propose to sit until we have disposed of the amendments on the paper, and that at quarter past 1, I shall adjourn for an hour for lunch, at 5 o'clock we shall have a half hour's tea interval and at a quarter to 8, there will be an hour and a quarter for dinner. I very much regret to have to press Hon'ble Members like this, but the Session is drawing to a close rapidly, and we shall have to have another day for the passing of the Bill, when the Bill has gone through this stage and the drafting has been carefully examined, and, I think, Hon'ble Members must see that the time really forces us to sit continuously in this manner. 11-3 A.M.

"We now come to Part II."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move that Part II be deleted. My Lord, we considered the provisions of Part I yesterday, or rather yesterday and to-day, and I may say at the outset that some of us might think of attempting to reconcile ourselves to the provisions of that Part, however drastic they may be, but so far as the provisions of Part II and the subsequent Parts are concerned, I must confess that I for one cannot and will never be able to reconcile myself to them, and I venture to think that no Indian who loves his country will ever reconcile himself to the provisions of these Parts. My Lord, these provisions are, in the words of Dr. Sapru, in his speech at the time of the introduction of this Bill, 'wrong in principle, unsound in concept, dangerous in operation and too sweeping and too comprehensive.' In my humble opinion, your Excellency, utterly subversive of the principles of democracy, has been recognised and acted upon in all civilized countries. 11-4 A.M.

[Mr. V. J. Patel.]

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

They in fact substitute the rule of the executive for the rule of law and they are, to quote again my Hon'ble friend Dr. Sapru, nothing but 'undiluted coercion,' pure and simple. My Lord, I venture to think that the provisions of these Parts will strike a death-blow to all legitimate and constitutional agitation in the country, and I for one see in them the grave of all our political aspirations. They will defeat their own purpose, for the reason that they will drive all agitation into hidden channels, with the result, my Lord, that consequential evils will follow as night follows the day. I am respectfully of opinion that the Government that contends that the country cannot be governed, even in ordinary times, without the assistance of such unconstitutional laws as are proposed to be enacted in these clauses forfeits its claim to be regarded as a constitutional government. Just consider for a moment what the provisions are. But before doing so, let us examine what powers Government actually have in their armoury in the way of preventive measures. I invite the attention of the Council to sections 106 to 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The heading of the Chapter is 'Prevention of Offences,' the very object with which the present provisions are proposed to be enacted. Section 106 provides that, whenever a person is found guilty of any offence which involves a breach of the peace, then he can be bound over on conviction. You may say that that applies to cases in which the accused is already convicted, but I refer this Council to section 107, which is purely preventive in its scope. Section 107, sub-clause (1), says :—

'Whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace, or disturb the public tranquillity, the Magistrate may, in manner hereinafter provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace for such period not exceeding one year as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix.'

"The period for security, as provided in the provisions now proposed to be enacted is also one year. Sub-clause (2) says :—

'Proceedings shall not be taken under this section unless either the person informed against or the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended, is within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction, and no proceedings shall be taken before any Magistrate, other than a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate, unless both the person informed against and the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended, are within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction.'

"And clause (3) is very important :—

'When any Magistrate not empowered to proceed under sub-section (1) has reason to believe that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity, and that such breach of the peace or disturbance cannot be prevented otherwise than by detaining such person in custody, such Magistrate may, after recording his reasons, issue a warrant for his arrest (if he is not already in custody or before the Court), and may send him before a Magistrate empowered to deal with the case, together with a copy of his reasons.'

"My Lord, this is not all, section 108 goes further. It says :—

'Whenever a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate, or a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, has information that there is within the limits of his jurisdiction any person who, within or without such limits, either orally or in writing, disseminates or attempts to disseminate, or in anywise abets the dissemination of—

- (a) any seditious matter, that is to say any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, or
- (b) any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 153-A of the Indian Penal Code, or
- (c) any matter concerning a Judge which amounts to criminal intimidation or defamation under the Indian Penal Code, such Magistrate may (in manner hereinafter provided) require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace for such period, not exceeding one year, as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix.

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"Now, my Lord, these powers in themselves are ample. However, there are further powers given by sections 109 and 110, which I do not propose to read to this Council and take up its time unnecessarily; but I will read only one other section, section 144, which has a great bearing on the question that we are considering. It says:—

'In cases where, in the opinion of a District Magistrate, a Chief Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate, or of any other Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government or the Chief Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate to act under this section, immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable, such Magistrate may, by a written order stating the material facts of the case and served in manner provided by section 134, direct any person to abstain from a certain act (mark the words) or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management, if such Magistrate considers such direction is likely to prevent, or tends to prevent, obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk, of obstruction, annoyance or injury, to any person lawfully employed, or danger to human life, health or safety, or a disturbance of the public tranquillity, or a riot, or an affray.'

"My Lord, I do not understand what more powers you want for the prevention of offences. The fact is that even the semblance of a trial before a Magistrate in cases under the prevention Chapter is proposed to be taken away and the executive is to be made the sole authority to decide whether a person's liberty shall be taken away.

"Let us now, my Lord, turn to the provisions of this Bill. Under section 20 the Governor-General in Council is empowered to say that in respect of what offences the magisterial inquiry shall be entirely dispensed with i.e., there shall be no inquiry whatever before a Magistrate or before any judicial authority. Once the Executive Government makes up its mind that a certain area should be proclaimed it shall be proclaimed, and in that area the Provincial executive shall be entitled to call upon any person '(1) to execute a bond with or without sureties for such period not exceeding one year as may be specified in the order, that he will not commit, or attempt or conspire to commit, or abet the commission of any offence against any provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule; without any trial, without any inquiry, (2) to notify his residence and any change of residence to such authority as may be specified; (3) to remain or reside in any area in British India specified; provided that, if the area so specified is outside the province, the concurrence of the Local Government of that area to the making of the order is first obtained; (4) to abstain from any act specified which, in the opinion of the Local Government, is calculated to disturb the public peace or is prejudicial to the public safety; and (5) to report himself to the officer in charge of the police-station nearest to his residence at such periods as may be specified.' Any or all of these orders may be passed all at once if the Local Government so chooses. And we are told that there are safeguards. Well, I am respectfully of opinion, your Excellency, that these safeguards are merely, if it is not unparliamentary to use the expression, 'farcical'; they are merely illusory; they mean nothing. I wish they had not provided these safeguards at all; there is no meaning in them. It is said the Local Government is to pass an interim order which may remain in force for one month or more if the Local Government so determines. The case will then be sent to the investigating authority for investigation. Now, who is to appoint this investigating authority? The authority passing the interim order will also appoint the investigating authority. And how is that investigating authority to conduct its inquiry? Inquiry is not the proper word for that. There is no inquiry. Call it investigation if you like. Inquiry is certainly an inappropriate and, I should say, wrong use of the word. The word inquiry, according to the Code of Criminal Procedure, applies to proceedings before a Magistrate, not by any other authority; and yet the word used is the word inquiry. However, the authority that will pass the interim order will appoint the investigating authority. Then again, that authority will hold its investigation—I will use the word investigation—in camera. For that purpose I will refer you to section 25, sub-clause (2), which says 'The investigating authority then hold inquiry in camera.'

[Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"It is not left to its discretion to decide whether it should hold an open inquiry, whether in part or in whole, but that it should hold the whole inquiry in camera for the purpose of ascertaining what in its opinion, having regard to the facts and circumstances adduced by the Government, appears against the person in respect of whom the order has been made. Then, will the person concerned be entitled to appear? No, the person concerned shall not as of right be entitled to appear and present his view of the case before the so-called investigating authority. My Lord, this means if the investigating authority so decides, 'the man may be condemned unheard—a principle unparalleled in the legislative history of any civilised country. However, if the investigating authority chooses to do so, the accused may be allowed a reasonable opportunity to appear before it—not at all its stages, but at some stage that the authority may deem proper. The section says:—

'Such authority shall in every case allow the person in question a reasonable opportunity of appearing before it at some stage in its proceedings and shall, if he so appears, explain to him the nature of the charge made against him and shall hear any explanation he may have to offer.'

"This further shows that the investigating authority is not bound to record the statements of witnesses on behalf of the prosecution or on behalf of the accused; and I go further and say that the investigating authority, under the proposals that we are now considering, has no power to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses for either party. If the Local Government chooses to produce some witnesses and asks—or I should say directs—the investigating authority to examine certain witnesses, the investigating authority may do so; but it has got no power to summon and compel the attendance of any witnesses. Apart from this, my Lord, the investigating authority is not bound to examine the witnesses produced by the person concerned. The investigating authority is not bound to record the statements which they make. The person concerned says 'I don't want summonses; I produce these witnesses; pray examine them;' but the investigating authority in its wisdom will say 'No, we are not going to examine these witnesses.' After hearing the explanation, if the person in question is called upon at all to do so, and after making such further investigation, if any, as appears to such authority to be relevant and reasonable—relevant not in the sense of the Evidence Act, but what he considers to be relevant—the authority shall record its conclusions. He may imagine a rule for himself and consider whether, in his opinion, certain statements, or certain inquiries are relevant or not, and decide whether he should make those inquiries or summon those witnesses. Then there is this proviso:

'Provided that the investigating authority shall not disclose to the person whose case is before it any fact the communication of which might endanger the public safety or the safety of the individual.'

"My Lord, I can quite understand—no, I cannot understand—it may be that you might leave the question of disclosing or not disclosing any facts to the person concerned to the discretion of the investigating authority; but to say 'it shall not disclose to the person whose case is before it any fact the communication of which is, etc., etc.,' however, material such fact may be for the purposes of the defence of the person concerned, of the person whose liberty is at stake, to say, my Lord, that 'the investigating authority shall not disclose' is to leave no discretion to the investigating authority.

"The second proviso says:—

'Provided further that nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to entitle the person in question to appear or to be represented before the investigating authority by pleader, nor shall the Local Government be so entitled.'

"Well, my Lord, I have already pointed out that it is for the investigating authority to consider whether the person concerned should be given an opportunity at any stage to appear before it or not. But who is to give that opportunity? And this provision says: 'Well, you appear in person. Do not embarrass our investigating authority by the presence of your pleader.'

shall not have anything to do with the pleader, you appear and we shall ask you certain questions and take down what you say, but no pleader.' My Lord, and what next? The investigating authority, after making the inquiry in the manner I have described, is to record a finding. Is the investigating authority to record a distinct finding that the person concerned is connected with any anarchical or revolutionary movement as alleged by the Local Government? No, it is left entirely to the discretion of the investigating authority to record what finding it pleases to record. And after that finding is recorded, it is sent on to the provincial executive. And here we find, your Excellency, what the real significance of these provisions is. After the Local Government receives the so-called finding of the investigating authority, it looks into it, and if perchance that finding happens to be favourable to the person concerned, the provincial executive is entitled to say 'We shall have nothing to do with it; we never appointed you for this purpose; we do not agree with you and we shall not accept your finding;' and then the provincial executive makes the interim order final.

"The provincial executive is not bound to pay any attention to the findings of the investigating authority, not at all bound to follow that finding. Then I pray why do you insert these provisions at all? Why make a show of an investigation in these cases? If the Local Government is pleased to believe that a person is concerned in any movement referred to in section 20 take the power you want and be done with it. You provide safeguards and those safeguards mean nothing. It looks as if these safeguards are provided to delude people; there is no meaning in these safeguards. You are not bound in any way to carry out the recommendations of the investigating authority.

"These, then, shortly, my Lord, are the provisions of this Chapter, and as I have observed in the beginning, speaking for myself I shall, with any modifications, never be able to reconcile myself to the provisions of this Part and the Part that follows, and I respectfully venture to submit that no Indian will ever do it."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, the Council will see that there is an identical motion in my name, and I think it is convenient that I should speak at this stage. My Lord, my work has been lightened very much by the exhaustive and eloquent speech of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel. All that I need do is to associate myself with his arguments and just to add a word or two. My Lord, as regards Part I, which we disposed of last night or early this morning, as my Hon'ble friend has said, we can in some manner reconcile ourselves to it. We find there is some precedent for it. As a humble fr in the profession I have been accustomed to look for precedents for everything extraordinary, everything novel, and here I find some precedent because some of the provisions of that Part are based upon the Irish Crimes Act. Nobody will say or claim that India is Ireland, and I sincerely hope and trust that it will not become another Ireland in spite of this measure which you are going to pass; but there is some precedent for that Part. There is also precedent in an earlier Act of this Council, namely, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, and therefore we are in a manner reconciled to that; and speaking for myself I can refer to the fact that, although I sent in notice of a very large number of amendments on this Bill, I did not propose that that Part should be deleted. But now coming to this Part which is now under discussion, what do you find? What about this Part, my Lord? Is there any sort of precedent anywhere in this big world? I earnestly invite the Hon'ble the Home Member and the Hon'ble the Law Member to tell this Council if there is such a precedent to be found anywhere in the civilised world. But, my Lord, I think I might give to this Council the benefit of my own researches in this domain, and I have made a discovery and come across a law upon which this Part can be based to some extent. I found, my Lord, I learned that there was a law in the Scottish border town of Jedburgh where they had execution before trial. Surely you can see that this Part has some resemblance to that. Here the executive Government first punishes a man; you pass an order internment him, confining him to any place, compelling him to dance attendance at the police-station; you pass an order directing him to abstain from any act which, in the opinion of the Local Government, is calculated to disturb the public peace or is prejudicial to the public safety—dangerously wide and vague terms; but these orders may be passed and not only that, but you direct that order to be carried out by all means, you do not even say by all lawful means; and we know, my Lord, there have been complaints of ‘torture committed upon persons who were detained; those complaints, those stories may for aught we know to be false; but in the face of those complaints one would have expected that this Part ought to be a little better, ought to have said at any rate ‘Use lawful means’. However, having passed an order of punishment, having had the execution as it were, you now give him a chance of some sort of inquiry, a Star Chamber inquiry. My Lord, every artist tries to improve upon his model and here we find the same thing. In Jedburgh they had a trial at least after the execution. Here you do not even find a trial. Although you say it is an inquiry, as my Hon’ble friend has just now told us, it is not an inquiry even. If it is anything at all it is a police investigation. Now, my Lord, what are the main features of this Part? My Hon’ble friend has dilated upon them and I need not repeat them again. You do not allow the accused to be present throughout and let the accuser confront him; you do not tell him what the evidence is against him; you do not even allow a lawyer to defend him; you do not allow him to call evidence which he wishes to call, and such as it is what is the result of this inquiry or the investigation? I prefer to call it what my Hon’ble friend called it, investigation. Well, when that authority comes to a sort of finding and reports it to you, it is not binding upon you. And this is the sort of inquiry you give to the man after having punished him. My Lord, these are the provisions of this Part in brief, and it is impossible that any one with a grain of self-respect in him, any one having the country’s welfare at heart, can possibly give any sort of support to this. I join my Hon’ble friend in moving that this Part be deleted.”

11-31 A.M.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

11-37 A.M.

The Hon’ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—“ My Lord, I have given notice of a similar amendment, and it would be convenient that I should have my say on the subject so that the Hon’ble the Home Member may know what some of us feel and think on the subject before he gives his ultimatum to the Council. My Lord, I have given notice for the deletion of only Part II of this Bill, because I feel that this is the most objectionable part of the Bill, the defensible part of the Bill, the most anti-British part of the Bill that one can most inconceive of. I can understand that there might be materials for action on the part of the Government of India under Parts I and III. Under Part I the Government of India will be invited to specify the offences connected or supposed to be connected with revolutionary or anarchical crime of which a person is accused. So would in a minor degree be the state of things under Part III. But, my Lord, under Part II there is no such criterion, there is no such basis to go upon. It is but the bare opinion of the Government of India that there are revolutionary movements at work, and we do not know exactly what may be passing in the mind of the Local Government or the Government of India for the time being as to what is revolutionary. I say there will be nothing for the Government of India to go upon except its bare opinion that the stage has been reached when there might be offences following. I ask, my Lord, in all humility, has not the Government powers at present to deal with cases of seditious persons who may be disposed to disturb the public peace, to promote revolutionary movements? Is not the definition of ‘sedition’ in section 124-A, sufficiently elastic for the purpose? Have you not got a press law which puts the press at the mercy of the executive, no doubt under the protection, it may be an illusory protection, of the judiciary, but still at the mercy of the executive?

“ What you want here is that you should not be subjected to the scrutiny of the judicial authority at any time whatsoever, you want to be free from all control; is not that the Eastern spirit as it is conceived to be by Westerners in excoisus? Are we the educated Indians who have imbibed the true British spirit, that have imbibed the true British traditions, are we not really trying to save the Government from the crisis, from the yawning gulf into which they are falling? You wish to take power now to prevent any scrutiny of the exercise of your authority by an independent judicial tribunal. Wherein, my Lord, does this differ from the true Eastern Government, as it is conceived to be in the imagination of the Westerners? You imagine that an Eastern potentate would have a man shot straight away should he be suspected of being guilty of being connected with the movements such as are referred to in this Part, would have him trampled under the feet of an elephant in order to strike terror into the hearts of the people, but your methods are more insidious, more dangerous and they are proposed to be sanctioned by a law passed by a British Legislature and in co-operation with the representatives of the people. What do these clauses give you? The power to ask a man to give any security whatever; you are not limited, you are not controlled in your discretion as to the grant of the security that may be demanded. I know of a poor man from whom was demanded a security to the extent of a lakh of rupees, making it practically impossible for him to give that security; you may be rendering the protection nugatory by reason of the excess of the security that may be demanded; you arrange that a man should be confined in any area that you please, is that not worse than any open cruelty by an Oriental Monarch? Take the case of a school-master who is in receipt of a fairly decent salary but is not able to save anything. He has got a large family; you think that the man is guilty of some connection with a revolutionary movement, and you ask him to reside outside the province, or it may be inside the province in a far off malarial tract, it may be a plague stricken jungle, don't you deprive him of his means of livelihood? Regulation III of 1818 provides at least that a man's livelihood should be secured to him, but this is denied here. How is the man to eke out his livelihood, don't you drive him into wild despair, into the commission of the very crimes that you desire to put down. How is the accused to eke out his livelihood, but you say 'oh my good fellow you are exaggerating, can you conceive of a liberal British Government ever being guilty of excesses' an Eastern Monarch would not have done otherwise than to wreak his vengeance on one who had thwarted him. I would ask wherein differs this frankly Eastern despotism from the law as it is going to be under Part II; then you may say the Government of India has power to consider dispassionately the recommendations of the Local Governments and control them. Is that always so? May it not be said that the demands of provincial autonomy would prevent the Government of India from interfering with the discretion of the Provincial Government. May it not be said that there is danger of a Governor who conceives his duties to lie in the rigorous enforcement of his powers, threatening to resign his office if he is not supported by the Government of India; may not the Governor be oppressed by the idea that the services have set their hearts upon a particular measure; when you come to analyse the true factors you reach the bedrock of Indian rule. The idea as to what constitutes proper government and public safety as they may be conceived by the British services may be honest, we have nothing to do with the question of honesty here, but may be opposed to what lofty vision, far sighted wisdom or true British spirit would recommend. You find in New India a daughter nation, it is in the fitness of things that it should be so, there is more of true British spirit than perhaps among some of those who though British nevertheless are of opinion that the British spirit does not pay with an Eastern people. Well, here the Government are asked to do one of several things which I have described. What does it mean? A district officer believes that a man is dangerous, the Government finds it impossible to decline to act upon such a strong report as is sent up by the district officer against a man. The officer may say 'I cannot carry on the administration of my district unless a particular person here is muzzled;' the Government asks for an explanation, the explanation will be forthcoming, reports from subordinates will be forthcoming and an order is passed. Is not the prestige of the whole Government being placed in favour of a presumption of the correctness of an ex-parte order. I can conceive of an ex-parte order being passed under Part III or under Part I, but I cannot conceive of interim orders being passed always or under

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir Verney Lovett; The President.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

Part II. Then again the members of this tribunal may be suspected that they look forward to the favour and pleasure of the Government. Are we not really depriving a man of the only means he has at present to prove his innocence by the enactment of this Part. I shall not expatiate further on the evils. I think, my Lord we, as conscientious advisers and true and loyal subjects of His Majesty, must risk any displeasure, must risk any misconception of our loyalty, must advise, your Excellency and your Excellency's Government what we feel to be the wisest and safest course. Pray do not enslave us. You are making us slaves by the enactment of this measure without knowing it perhaps, you are doing so. We know that we are living under a despotism. The will of the people is not associated with the Government so as to command it. Let us not talk now of a Reform Bill which may or may not be enacted into law; we do not know what is in the embryo of the future. Let us take the present as it is. We have but the shadow of a judicial protection in some cases, in others the protection of the judiciary under the partial control of an executive Government for the reform of which we have been agitating for the last so many years. Pray, do not remove that one protection which prevents our being reminded continuously, harassingly, of the condition into which we have fallen. Pray, My Lord, rescue us from a law which places us at the sweet mercy of a police officer, of a Magistrate, he may be honest or dishonest, he may be honest but foolish, ignorant of the true conditions of the world, unequal to his task and therefore, in the zealous discharge and performance of his task, may land the people and the Government alike in danger."

11-53A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett :—" My Lord, I suppose it is a hopeless endeavour, but I should like to make a last attempt to induce my non-official friends to see the broad facts of this matter as they really are and not as they seem in the strange light in which they present themselves to the point of view which we have heard so frequently reiterated in the debates of this and last month. The same point of view, with considerable extravagances, is constantly put forward in the press. I have seen reports of speeches and articles in newspapers the object of which plainly is to persuade people that Government in introducing this Bill is trying to erect a monstrous engine of tyranny and oppression. Only the other day I read an article accusing Government of being blinded by zid enmity and of doing the Empire unmitigated harm by driving people mad 'without rhyme or reason.' Again I saw that a speaker had compared the action of Government to the action of Nadir Shah, the man who sacked this famous city. The speaker implied that Nadir Shah was at any rate an honest tyrant, but the Government is not even honest in its tranny

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I have never by implication or otherwise tried to impute any dishonesty to the Government here or anywhere, and if I have used such expressions I beg that I may not

His Excellency the President :—" Sir Verney Lovett has not imputed anything to the Hon'ble Member. He is merely quoting statements which he has seen made. No imputation has been made against the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett :—" Your Lordship is quite right in your explanation. I was not referring to the Hon'ble Member. If he asks me afterwards I can tell him to whom I was referring.

"Our friends here are not so hard on Government, but they have managed to persuade themselves that Government really is very hard on them and on the country. Yet the truth is that Government is not only not hard on them, but is simply performing its plain and obvious duty to Society. It cannot possibly do otherwise without forfeiting all claim to public respect and confidence.

"The facts stated in the Rowlatt Report are now universally admitted except by a few ingenious persons like my friend Mr. Khaparde. It is further admitted by so vigorous an opponent of this Bill as my friend Mr. Jinnah that—I will use his own words ‘it is common sense that by these powers’ by the powers which Government now proposes to take, ‘you can more effectively deal with conspiracies’. But, says Mr. Jinnah and say other members: “If you take these powers you will take them against our will, for, as Mr. Jinnah put it, you will be restraining personal liberty, you will be interning men without open trial, and thus you will deprive us of what you yourself have fought for in England from the time of King John.” This is the real main argument which prompts the opposition to this Bill, and I would like to answer it. The idea is that the British Government is doing in India or is trying to do in India what it would not do or try to do in Great Britain. Let us summarise the facts. Certain clever conspirators discovered that in a portion of this vast Continent of India, with its 315 millions of people sprung from various racial stocks, speaking many languages, professing various religious creeds, living in numberless towns and villages, and for the most part extremely credulous and simple, they discovered, I say, that in a particular province of India, where communications are extraordinarily difficult and educated young men are often poor, badly taught and impressionable, it was possible to organise revolutionary associations over wide areas. These associations at first conducted their operations with caution and trepidation. As the Rowlatt Report puts it—‘at first the persons undertaking to commit outrages showed a lack of resolution,’ but as they discovered gradually how extremely easy it was to outwit a sparse and ill-armed police working in a great big capital city and its suburbs, or in the towns and villages of a vast water-country mainly devoid of roads and proper communications; as too they obtained modern fire arms and learnt how to manufacture bombs under the cover of a big political agitation, they contrived a remarkably elaborate and complete series of criminal organisations. They also established an extraordinary terrorism over the minds both of the lower classes and of many sane members of their own class. To give an instance of what I mean, let me read a passage from a speech by Lord Carmichael, dated the 11th of December 1916:

‘Only a few days ago I spoke to one of you, one who has influence, one who has eloquence, and who knows how to use both, and who, I believe, hates the crimes as much as I do; he told me that if he were to go as he would like to go to certain places in Bengal, and were to denounce the crimes publicly as he would like to denounce them, he would do it at the risk of his life; and I told him that this is not a risk which he ought lightly to undertake, and is certainly not a risk which I ought to ask him to undertake.’

“There is no doubt about all this. Anyone who knows Bengal could, if he chose, confirm my statement. What have Mr. Justice Beachcroft and Sir N. G. Chandavarkar said quite recently in a document which can be bought for three annas in booksellers’ shops in Calcutta? They wrote this:—‘The records before us conclusively prove that the revolutionary organisations are secret conspiracies which have spread into different parts of the province, entered homes, schools and colleges, and have reduced their secrecy of operations almost to scientific methods. They have pledged their members to the closest secrecy of their movements on pain of instant death by murder in the event of disclosure; that is one of their rules, and every attempt has been made to give effect to it. Before the Defence of India Act was brought into force, the fair trial of a person accused of revolutionary crime had been rendered practically impossible by the murders of approvers, witnesses, police officers and law-abiding citizens suspected by revolutionaries of having given information to, or otherwise assisted, the police in the detection of revolutionary crime. A situation of terrorism was created, the current of truth and justice was disturbed, so as to prevent a fair, open and impartial trial in the ordinary criminal courts, with the result that approvers and witnesses would not come forward to give evidence openly lest they should be assassinated.’ Not only were the revolutionary conspirators so successful in the province of Bengal, but they succeeded in extending their operations or their influence to other provinces and in causing considerable trouble there. In February 1915, in conjunction with the Sikh Ghadr conspirators, they nearly brought about widespread bloodshed and tragedy; and was there ever a more cruel, brutal murder than the murder of the Mahant and the boy in Bihar described in the Rowlatt Committee's Chapter VIII ? Now, I need hardly remind Mr. Jinnah that Great Britain is a small country endowed with excellent communications and inhabited by a homogeneous community which differs widely from the great masses who dwell together in the enormous Continent of India. It would be impossible for any gangs of conspirators to organise and keep going in Great Britain an elusive, potent and enduring system of robbery, murder and terrorism, of the sort which has been so successful in Bengal and has attempted operations in other provinces. But we may be quite certain that if anything of the kind were attempted in Great Britain, and achieved even a small measure of success, if witnesses were extensively terrorised, if evidence was therefore unobtainable, and if policemen were constantly shot, if the ordinary law were for reasons of this kind inefficacious, my countrymen would most certainly devise remedies as drastic, and probably much more drastic, than that contained in the Bill now before this Council. As it is, different as are conditions in India and England, successive Secretaries of State and successive Governments of India, have always been most reluctant to undertake in India legislation of the preventive kind now proposed. Let me refer the Council to paragraph 176 of the Rowatt Report. It deserves careful reading. As a matter of fact the whole history of the attempts of the Secretary of State, of the Government of Bengal and of the Government of India to deal with and stop anarchical and revolutionary crimes is a history of extreme reluctance to deprive any man of his liberty in any measure except after an ordinary trial in an ordinary court of law. It was only when they were forced by a developing and extending criminal propaganda and organisation from position to position, when things got worse and worse, when 'the forces of law and order working through the ordinary channels' were beaten, that early in 1914, they contemplated a substantial number of internments. Even then they did not act till the war broke out, and by adducing other considerations and greatly encouraging the revolutionary crimes compelled prompt and effective remedy. What were the effects of that remedy ? They are apparent from the Rowlatt Report, are admitted by some gentlemen now in opposition and were described by Lord Carmichael in a farewell speech. What he said was this :—

'The Defence of India Act is what has helped us. I am only saying what I believe to be absolutely true when I say that the Defence of India Act has helped to defend the young, educated men of Bengal as nothing else has defended them—not their own fathers—not their teachers, for they were ignorant, not their associates, nor they themselves, for they were blind to the danger'.

"So it comes to this, that faced for years by a bloodthirsty criminal organisation which flourished on the perversion of the young and on the timidity of older persons, the Secretary of State and the Government of India, at last under the added stress of the War, discovered an effective remedy.

"In order to secure the country against any revival of the disease they wished to place a measure permanently on the Statute-book which would warn intending conspirators of what renewed revolutionary conspiracies would have to meet. In deference to the view of Hon'ble Members that such a measure would attach a serious strain to the fair name of India, they consented to make it operative for three years only. Still the measure is objected to, and they are asked either to postpone legislation, to abandon it, or if it cannot be abandoned, to make it entirely ineffectual. I have not been able to gather from any of my non-official friends how such action would be consonant with the indefeasible obligation which lies on Government to protect the lives and property of its servants and subjects, and to safeguard the future from a rekindling of revolutionary embers which, as Mr. Banerjea himself has admitted, have not expired."

12-9 P. M.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. Fagan :—"My Lord, the amendment moved by the Hon'ble Member, taken in combination with the amendments were which disposed of yesterday and other amendments which are yet to come dealing with parts of the Bill as units, all appear to be part of an attempt to secure the extinction of this measure by a process of gradual and progressive amputation. As such, the amendment seems to me to aim at the very heart of the Bill before the Council. In the very few observations which I propose to inflict on the Council, I will confine myself as strictly as possible to Part II of the Bill. The criticisms of the Hon'ble Member regarding that Part appear to me to be very largely beside the point. They appear to be based on the assumption that Part II is an attempt to set up a judicial authority of a more or less normal kind. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that that is not their object. Part II of the Bill, as I understand it, seeks to set up certain executive and preventive machinery to be used and used only under very special and, as we may hope, very rare circumstances. The Hon'ble Member in the course of his rather lengthy argument has vouchsafed scarcely a word of reference to the fact that the whole Bill, including Part II, is to come into active operation only under conditions of grave peril to public law and order with which, in the opinion of the Supreme Government, the ordinary judicial procedure is incapable of dealing effectively. A casual listener might have inferred from the arguments of the Hon'ble Member, and his supporters, that this portion of the Bill, and in fact the whole Bill, is to be in practical operation in every part of India at all times, and not under the very special and rare circumstances to which I have referred. That, my Lord, is a matter which I hope to have an opportunity of referring to at greater length when the time comes for making some general observations on the Bill. I do not propose to follow the Hon'ble Member in his analysis of the provisions of Part II, but I will content myself with this remark that the machinery set up by it is as mild and as protective of the interests of the person who is involved in its operation, as is possible under the special circumstances which, from start to finish, constitute the view point not only of Part II but of the whole measure."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay;—"My Lord, this Bill is 12-14 P.M. divided into two main divisions embodying two great principles. The one is punitive and the other is preventive, and it seems to me that when we had our debate on the question of referring the Bill to the Select Committee, this Council decided those principles; and I confess I was somewhat puzzled to know what line the Hon'ble Mr. Patel and the other Members who had proposed this motion would take in supporting their amendments. As a matter of fact, the Hon'ble Member in charge of this Bill told the Council that he regarded the preventive measures as almost the more important of the two, and he reminded us that the Rowlatt Committee themselves did not expect very much from the punitive measures without the adoption of preventive measures in addition. The mainspring of the opposition to this Part of the Bill lies in that principle which has been so often referred to, namely, that no man's liberty should be taken away without a judicial trial in accordance with the ordinary rules of procedure and evidence, and that, my Lord, is the common ground between those who oppose this measure and those who support it. It is recognised on all hands that it is objectionable that these canons should not be observed whenever a man's liberty is interfered with. But there are people who carry this objection to an extreme point. 'Perish law and order, but let not one innocent man be touched'; and that is where we differ from them. While there are those who carry the principle beyond the bounds of reason, I feel that there are many Members in this Council who do not go so far. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah recognised that there might be a time when he would stand side by side with Government with the utmost reluctance it might be, and I feel it is just a question of this. Is our case strong enough? I say it could not be stronger. We have heard the case explained to us by the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett and the only way in which I could conceive that anybody could maintain that it would be stronger would be if they should be in a position to say 'You have got these crimes rampant now, and therefore it is essential to take drastic action.' But I maintain, my Lord, that this is not a sound position. It is the very fact that the measures which we have taken have been so successful, which justifies us in asking this Council to give us a continuance of those powers.

[Sir James DuBoulay ; Mr. M. A. Jinnah.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

" I do not propose to follow the Hon'ble Mr. Patel into the various details of the Part to which he has referred, because I think every one of the points which he has taken will be dealt with in the amendments that are to come before us.

" I would only say to the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, as regards his remarks that we have got section 124-A. and so on, that the whole of our case lies in the fact that terrorism has made our ordinary judicial procedure impossible for dealing with this class of crime. Again, as to the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's remark that we could use the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code, I would first of all point out that there is an amendment on the Agenda paper on which we shall discuss that very proposal or very much the same proposal, and that the same argument that I have already used applies here too, inasmuch as in the case of the Criminal Procedure Code you are bound by the ordinary laws of evidence and all those rules of procedure which, as I have explained, cannot be adopted in cases of this class.

" There is only one other point, my Lord, that I wish to refer to. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has thrown it in our teeth that we contemplate to use the provisions contained in Part II before they are necessary and under conditions when they are not necessary. I would only say that the conditions laid down for bringing Part II into operation are the result of the recommendation, which I think must carry conviction to a great many minds of the Rowlatt Committee. We venture to lay some stress on the desirability from every point of view of the Government being able to take mild measures early. The Rowlatt Committee emphasize the importance of this. Government have endeavoured to follow their recommendation ; they have endeavoured to provide some minor forms of restriction in this Part for a less dangerous state of affairs, and they have endeavoured to introduce reasonable safeguards. The question whether those forms of restriction are in their detail proper is a matter which will be dealt with when the various amendments concerning them come under discussion and I do not think, I need say any more now, my Lord, than that Government must oppose the amendment now before us."

12-20 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah :—" My Lord, this Part of the Bill is, as I said on the very first occasion, to me abhorrent and shocking, and on that occasion, my Lord, I stated my reasons for it. I would not really have spoken in the Council on this motion of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's more than by merely saying that I am strongly opposed to this Part of the Bill, and I would have done that, my Lord, for this reason, that I really feel that I cannot even trust myself to discuss this Part lest I may give vent to my feelings and my opinion, which I honestly say to this Council I cannot possibly express in words, namely, my repugnance for this Part of the Bill. But it is the first time that the Government side have tried to meet the real point in this debate, and that point having been made, I venture to make a few observations.

" The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett quoted me, but only portions of my reasons for opposing this Part II. Therefore, as he has quoted me, he does not quite correctly represent my position or the grounds of my position. But I will meet his point. And the point which he endeavoured to make was that there is real danger, and that being so, are we, as a Government, not entitled to enact this measure into law? Now, my Lord, that is the sole question which the Council has got to decide. If I may quote an authority—and I am quoting Blackstone who has been quoted by Lord Shaw (I am not quoting this as a judgment, but merely as a quotation from Blackstone and for convenience sake I am quoting it from his judgments). This is what he says :

' Blackstone is quite clear upon the practice of the Constitution. He searchingly treats the case both of liberty and life as tests both and equally of one and the same principle—the very principle which is under scrutiny in the present case. To bereave a man of life or by violence to confiscate his estate without accusation or trial would be so gross and notorious an act of despotism as must at once convey the alarm of tyranny throughout the whole kingdom ; but confinement of the person, by secretly hurrying him to jail where his sufferings are unknown or forgotten, is a less public and less striking and therefore a more dangerous engine of arbitrary government.'

" And this is, my Lord, the point.

' And yet sometimes when the State is in real danger, even this may be a necessary measure.'

" Therefore, my Lord, to stop here for a moment, this measure is justified by the Government on the ground that the State is in real danger. Now I shall proceed :

' But the happiness of our constitution is that it is not left to the executive power to determine when the danger of a State is so great as to render this measure expedient.'

" My Lord, I repeat this—What is happening here ? Who is determining that danger to the State here to-day ? I emphatically say, the Executive Government. The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett said ' If a danger was made out in my own country, my own countrymen would have no hesitation in passing a measure of this kind.' My Lord, I venture to say that we have the case of Ireland in front of us, and I am sure the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett knows more about Ireland than I do. Have you taken any steps of this kind in Ireland ? Are there not revolutionary movements ? Is Ireland not in danger ? Did you not find that in the midst of this war, when the Empire was in the throes of danger and death, Ireland was conspiring with your enemies and rebelled ? What has happened in India ? In India it is acknowledged that a large body of men are absolutely loyal. Because a few hundred men or a few thousand men have gone astray, and there again, my Lord, I make bold to say in this Council that wrong as their actions are, I again repeat what I said, that it is also due to your policy ; and because from this position you ask us to enact measures of this kind which are opposed to the teachings of history, which are opposed to the fundamental principles of the constitution, which are opposed to the fundamental principles of justice ; and says the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett that I admitted that it is commonsense, that if I give these powers to Government, the Government will secure a larger number of guilty persons. Of course, if you spread your nets with these arbitrary engines you will certainly get a larger number of the guilty ; but how many will you also take into that net of yours who are innocent ; and why should the Legislature give you such powers unless the State was in real danger, and what is the danger that you have made out ? That is the sole question. I shall proceed with my quotation, my Lord :—

' The authority is Parliament only or legislative power that whenever it sees proper can authorise the Crown, by suspending the Habeas Corpus Act for a short and limited time, to imprison suspected persons without giving any reasons for so doing.'

" Therefore, my Lord, if these powers are given to you, you will be imprisoning suspected persons, not necessarily guilty persons, and if you are going to suspect 500 people, I daresay in that 500 lot you may have some really guilty ones. But what about the innocent ? The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett, my Lord, on the last occasion gave us a barrowing account of those whose properties were robbed and those whose lives were taken away by some of these revolutionaries, and he said ' what about them ? '

" My Lord, I am equally anxious to protect them. I entirely agree with him that they are entitled to the protection of Government ; but they at any rate were there face to face with the person who assaulted them ; they at any rate had the chance of giving it back. But what about the innocents that will get into your net ? What chance have they except to rot in jail without a remedy ? My Lord, therefore, I quite agree, I quite admit that ; and I again say this to Sir James DuBoulay, who spoke on behalf of Government. I assure you that if I was convinced that the British rule was in danger, if I was convinced that there was a real danger to India, I shall have no hesitation, as I said, although in my own heart I shall be loath to give my sanction to a measure of this character, yet I shall do it. But I am not satisfied, my Lord, I am not satisfied that you have made out a case to ask us to place these powers in your hands. What will this be, my Lord ? We know that even the Star Chambers were condemned. They at least had the semblance of a judicial trial. Why were they condemned? They were condemned because, in the words of a great constitutional authority, Maitland, 'it was a court of politicians enforcing a policy, not a court of judges administering the law.' That is what you will constitute yourself, a court of politicians, and what is worse, even without the semblance of a trial as there was in the Star Chamber.

"My Lord, I do not wish to detain this Council any longer. I do not wish to repeat what I have said, but I really cannot understand, especially in view of the facts which were stated to this Council by the Hon'ble the Home Member, who said that these revolutionary movements—I am not quoting his exact words, but I believe I am correctly representing it—he said that these revolutionary movements were brought under hand to a very large extent; it is said that the Defence of India Act has done a great deal of good; it is also well known that large numbers of detenues have been released, that things are much better than they were. But Government say 'Oh they might at any time get worse; therefore please pass these laws.' I say, my Lord, that is again opposed to the very fundamental principle. Government say it might get worse. I say these powers can only be granted if Government really feel that there is imminent and real danger. Then you come to the Legislature and I am sure, as I said before, you will have the support of at least some representatives of the people, and I am sure that you will also have the support of the people themselves. By this what are you doing now? Unless I am wrong, and I am sure I am not wrong, the people are against this, and my Lord, I should like to see a Minister in England or the Government in England, however much they may be convinced of the wisdom of a measure like this, bringing a measure in Parliament; and my Lord, I should like to see Sir Verney Lovett as the Prime Minister. His Premiership will not be worth 24 hours, if he ever dared to bring such a Bill as this. Here the people are opposed and the representatives of the people are opposed: but say the executive Government 'We have got the welfare of the country at heart; we know your interests; we know your interests better, we know your welfare better than you understand it yourselves. We shall take these powers, and (to use again the words of the Hon'ble the Law Member) we are not going to surrender our considered judgment.' Well, if you think you are not going to surrender your considered judgment, I have not the power that you have. But I make bold to say that we are not going to surrender our considered judgment, and we say that you are wrong, and I hope that the consequences will be less disastrous than I expect."

12-30 P.M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—"My Lord, when the Bill was introduced in this Council I ventured to characterise it as undiluted coercion. During the month that has elapsed since, I have most dispassionately applied my mind to a consideration of this Bill; and, my Lord, although one might find a possible excuse for altering the ordinary recognised rules of law so far as Part I is concerned, I think he would be a bold man who could assert that Part II has the remotest resemblance to any law in any part of the world. Now, my Lord, we have been talking during the last two days of the Irish Coercion Bill. So far as I have been able to analyse that Act of 1882, it seems to me that it is possible to institute a comparison between that Act and some of the provisions of Part I of the present Bill. But there the parallel ends. When you come to examine the provisions of Part II of this Bill, what do you find? You find that all pretence to conformity with recognised judicial forms is frankly given up, and you find that it is the opinion of the Local Government which really decides for the time being that a person is or has been actively concerned in a particular area in any dangerous movement. It is not as if you ask the investigating authority to decide first as to whether that man is or has been concerned in any dangerous act or has been connected with any dangerous movement. You first decide it for yourself: you say to the investigating authority: 'This is our belief; we believe that this man has been concerned in a dangerous movement, and now we want you to investigate.' My Lord, I venture to repeat again that is not complying with recognised judicial forms of inquiry. I say deliberately it is nothing short of mockery. Well, either the Local Government feels confident of its own opinion or it does not. If it feels so absolutely confident, why then waste the time of three valuable public servants? Why then ask that particular individual to go unaided by counsel before the investigating authority and take further risks of having to answer questions which he may or may not appreciate, and why then ask the investigating authority to submit his report to the Local Government when that Local Government may either accept or refuse to accept it? All that seems to me to be perfectly superfluous. Now, my Lord, the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett has given us again this morning a very graphic picture of the sad condition of Bengal. My Lord, I do not dispute those facts. I will assume for the sake of argument that every single fact given by Sir Verney Lovett is absolutely correct; still the question which arises is, do you think that by providing these remedies you would be able to kill the mischief that has arisen in Bengal?

"What has been our experience during the last twelve years? Have you not come time after time to this Council and said: 'We find this law is inadequate, we find we cannot carry on the administration effectively, we find we cannot cope with the growing mischief, please give us more powers.' You have come every now and again with requests like this to the Council and the Council has rightly or wrongly complied with your request? What do we find now? You say: 'Well we have not been able to carry on the administration effectively.' The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay said: 'We have been so successful in the past that we are encouraged to ask you to continue a measure of this character.' Well I say with all respect to Sir James DuBoulay: 'Neither have you been successful in the past nor will you be successful with this measure in bringing about that result.' I say deliberately that you cannot possibly ignore the lessons of history. In England ever since 1882 you have had Coercion Acts, passed for Ireland. Have they solved the Irish questions? Has Ireland been reconciled, has Ireland not given its answer at a time when everyone expected that Ireland would have stood by England? Coercive measures have never succeeded in history, they may have satisfied the administration for the time being, they may enable the administration to imagine that it has been able to cope with a dangerous movement, but the dangerous movement is there and will be there in spite of coercive measures.

"My Lord, there is only one name to which I will refer. I do so with great pleasure, because so far as that name is concerned, my Hon'ble friend Sir Verney Lovett agrees that great weight is to be attached to it. I refer to Sir Narayan Chandravarkar. Sir Verney Lovett referred to the report of Sir Narayan Chandravarkar and Mr. Justice Beachcroft in support of his position. May I ask Sir Verney Lovett to read the letters of Sir Narayan Chandravarkar which have appeared recently in the 'Times of India.' If Sir Narayan Chandravarkar is to be quoted as an authority for the position that Sir Verney Lovett has taken, may I ask the Council to remember what this learned Judge has to say after having gone through the papers? He has publicly said of this measure that the remedy you are providing will prove worse than the evil it is intended to cure. My Lord, it is not for me to say what other things you may do, but I can tell you that the provisions of Part II will never be acceptable. Much as I appreciate the desire of the Government, much as I sympathise with the Government in its desire to give protection and security to its servants, and to its subjects, much as I should like to co-operate with them in everything that seems reasonable, I think, my Lord, I owe it to you, I owe it to my conscience, to say that so far as Part II is concerned, its provisions will never be accepted by Indians, whether they are Extremists or whether they are Moderates."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"My Lord, reference has been made to the condition of Bengal by some of the speakers. I feel that it is my duty to make a few observations with regard to that condition, and to show how far improvement may be secured by the provision which it is now proposed to enact into law. My Lord, I think it is admitted by all the upholders of official policy, as well as by its Indian critics, that the condition of Bengal has improved. I think this is admitted and it can be proved by a reference to facts and figures. As I had observed the other day, and the statement was not challenged by my Hon'ble friend the Home Member, that whereas the number of detenus this time last year was about one thousand, there are now less than four hundred. That is to say the condition of Bengal has so far improved that the Government has felt that it is in a position to release nearly 2-3rds of the number of the detenus, and not only that, but the conditions of their confinement have been very materially improved and relaxed; and the question has been asked in this Council in the course of the debate to which we have been listening, what may be the causes of this improvement? Here, again, we have got two versions. The popular version is that the Reforms scheme and the policy of the Government have had a large share in the process of tranquillising. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda the other day read out a letter, I think from a person in confinement in the Andamans, a revolutionary. He distinctly said—and these revolutionaries are not in the habit of dissembling their ideas and convictions—that the Reform proposals with which the honoured name of your Excellency will for ever be associated, have had a mollifying effect on the situation. I have not the slightest doubt that this conciliatory policy has had an excellent effect, but whatever it may be, whether it be the policy of conciliation or whether it be the policy of coercion, or whether it be the joint operation of these two policies, the improvement is there and no one can question or gainsay that that is the common ground upon which we and the authorities take our stand. Let us apply that as a test by which to judge of this Bill. If the condition of Bengal is good, if the condition of Bengal has improved and is fairly satisfactory, is there any justification for this Bill or at any rate for this Part of the Bill, which admittedly is the most objectionable? Bengal is the greatest sinner in this matter, the Punjab occupies the next place. Well that being so, I think the position of Bengal is a crucial consideration in this matter.

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

“The circumstances have changed, and therefore the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee do not maintain the same ground as they did last year. And if that be so, I maintain that a law largely based upon these recommendations ought not to be accepted by this Council. My Lord, I am quite sure if there was any danger, any real menace to the State, this Council would be unanimous in supporting any proposal, any law that you might think fit to enact. The safety of the State is the supremest of all considerations, salus civitatis suprema lex. But the safety of the State is not the consideration here, the safety of the State is not involved here, therefore, your drastic provision is altogether out of proportion to the requirements of the situation, and it may do harm, it is bound to do harm, creating an atmosphere of uneasiness and excitement. It has already produced an atmosphere of conflict and controversy; it has already generated a large measure of alarm, anxiety and apprehension in the public mind. Is it desirable, is it expedient, ought not the Council to pause and hesitate before it enacts this Bill into law? My Lord, this Council has never shown the smallest hesitation in enacting such laws as you thought necessary for the ends of the administration, for the pacification and the tranquillising of the country. You passed the Seditious Meetings Act in 1910; you passed the Press Act; you passed the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, you passed the Defence of India Act, was there any serious opposition in this Council on those occasions similar to the one which you are now witnessing? Is it not unique, is it not something which had never happened in the history of this country? Have you ever had such a large number of amendments, about 187 or so? Was there a midnight sitting, members going to sleep on the benches? It was a unique thing which never happened in the history of this Council, and you are enacting this measure in a half somnolent condition. What will the country say to it? I believe it will add to the anxieties, to the fears and the excitement it has already produced. Therefore, my Lord, having regard to the volume of opposition that has been awakened and to the fact that such opposition is unique in the history of this Legislative Council, and having regard to the fact that there is really no necessity for a drastic piece of legislation of this kind, and in view of the altered conditions of Bengal, I do implore your Excellency's Government to reconsider the situation and to give up at least this Part which seems to be the most offending part of this Bill."

The Hon'ble Sirdar Sundar Singh Majithia:—^{12-55 P.M.} "My Lord, I do not want to express any opinion on the provisions of Part II of the Bill, but what I am concerned at present is, about certain remarks which fell from my Hon'ble friend Sir Verney Lovett about the members of my community who had returned from Canada and who, I am sorry to say, had been led astray by clever persons under the grievances and the hardships and suffering they had to undergo in their self-sought exile from their country, of being separated from their families and kith and kin by the laws of that country. It is no wonder then, that smarting under these grievances they were easily misled from their established traditions. My community, my Lord, has met with a merited measure of praise from the Rowlatt Committee, who in paragraph 137 say that in the Punjab 'the most martial section is the Sikh which, during the present war with less than one-hundredth of the population, has supplied about one-sixth of the fighting forces of the Indian Empire.' The services of my community from the time of their connection with the British are proof positive of what this small, though important, community has done in the past. The various fields of battle red with the blood of the community is a living testimony and will ever remain so of the loyalty of a community to which I have the honour to belong. You can, therefore, imagine, my Lord, how grieved I am at the allusion that the Sikh Ghadr conspirators were concerned in the troublesome times in my province. My friend forgets that many of these people had totally estranged themselves from the Sikh religion and ideals of the community. The Rowlatt Committee admits these Sikh conspirators to be 'ignorant peasants who have been misled by Har Dayal' who by the way has now turned a new page in his life and become a Home Ruler. No wonder then that these ignorant people were misled by clever people who wanted to serve their own ends and who played upon the real grievances of these simple persons. But what do we find further in the report? A deputation of the leading Sikhs came forward to assist the authorities to deal with their kith and kin, and in paragraph 142 of their Report, the Rowlatt Committee say:—

'On the 31st January 1916, the Punjab Government wrote: 'The returned emigrants among the Sikhs are reported to be settling down, and the feeling among the Sikhs generally is reported to be more satisfactory than at any time for some years. The gallant behaviour of Sikh regiments at the front has done much to restore amour propre of the community which was apprehensive that its good name would suffer from the crimes of the returned emigrants

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar:—"I beg to rise to a point of order. May I know, your Excellency, if there is any connection of all this with the amendment before the Council?"

His Excellency the President:—"Yes, I am waiting to hear what it has got to do with the amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett:—"I merely wish to make a personal explanation. All I wished to say was that I merely referred to the Sikh conspirators of the Ghadr party who joined the attempt of a secret outbreak in 1915. No one is more desirous than I am of doing entire justice to the splendid loyalty and spirit of the Sikh community as a body."

The Hon'ble Sirdar Sundar Singh Majithia:—"My point, my Lord, is simply this, that many of these people were not Sikhs at all."

[The President ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; Sir William Vincent ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President :—" Yes, but the Hon'ble Member must adhere to the amendment before the Council. He is now entirely off the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I have nothing more to add, my Lord."

The motion was put and the Council divided as follows :—

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch till 2-15 P.M.]

2-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 20, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I beg to move that in clause 20 for the words 'in Council' the words 'with the consent of the Legislative Council of India' be substituted.

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[*Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Mr. V. J. Patel ;
Mr. G. S. Khaparde ; Sir William Vincent ;
The President ; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.*]

"I will not make any speech, my Lord. This matter was argued yesterday. The point we contend for is, that under the peculiar circumstances of this measure, it is desirable that the Governor General should receive the consent of this Legislative Council before a notification is issued under this section.

I beg to move this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, as I have an amend- 2-17 P.M. ment, I rise to support the amendment of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda and merely desire to add this that, whatever may be said for not taking the sanction of the Legislative Council with regard to the provisions of Part I before issuing a notification, there is a good deal to be said in favour of taking such sanction in connection with Part II, because under Part I a man is to be put on his trial before a special tribunal. Under Part II, however, there is no such thing. It is necessary, therefore, that the representatives of the people should be given an opportunity of expressing their opinion on the question whether a notification under the provisions of Part II should issue or not."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, I have got an amendment of the same kind. The reasons have been given by Hon'ble speakers already, so I do not propose to repeat them."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I dealt with this question at some length yesterday, and I do not propose to repeat what I said then ; but, for the reasons given in the case of the previous amendments, which apply equally to this one, I must oppose the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I have nothing more to add, my Lord."

The motion was put and negatived.

His Excellency the President:—"I think, Mr. Patel, you do not
* 'That in clause 20 after the words 'he wish to press your amendment.'*
may' the words 'with the previous approval of the Indian Legislative Council' be inserted."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"No, I do not."

His Excellency the President:—"Nor you, Mr. Khaparde?"

* 'That in clause 20 after the words 'he may'
the words 'with the concurrence of the Indian Legislative Council' be inserted.'

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"No, my Lord."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Your Excel- 2-19 P.M. lency, before I move this amendment formally, I beg to point out that I have made an omission in the second part of the amendment. Will your Lordship allow me to have it corrected?"

His Excellency the President:—"What are you referring to?"

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"The second part of the amendment reads :—

'If within the period of 14 days after the notification has been laid before the Indian Legislative Council, and a Resolution is carried by the Council, then, etc.'

"Between the words 'Council' and 'then', there ought to have been the words 'that such a notification shall not continue in force'.

● "This is an omission : I cannot say whether it is due to a slip of the pen or a mistake in printing, but it is a clerical error after all."

[Sir William Vincent; The President; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I am informed that the amendment in the Agenda is exactly as proposed by the Hon'ble Member."

His Excellency the President:—"Do you raise any objection?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I am afraid I cannot hear the Hon'ble Member."

His Excellency the President:—"I understand you wish to put in certain words?"

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"Yes, my Lord. I wish to put in these words 'that such a notification shall not continue in force' between the words 'carried by the Council' and 'then.' Without these words the clause will not be complete."

His Excellency the President:—"He means 'and a Resolution is carried by the Council that such a notification shall not continue in force, then such notification shall not continue in force, etc.' Go on, Mr. Shukul."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"My Lord, I beg to move the following amendment:—

'That to clause 20 the following proviso be added:—

'Provided that such notification shall be laid before the Indian Legislative Council within seven days after the making thereof if the said Council is then sitting and if not sitting, within seven days after the next meeting of the Indian Legislative Council. If within the period of 14 days after the notification has been laid before the Indian Legislative Council and a resolution is carried by the Council that such notification shall not continue in force, then such notification shall not continue in force, but shall be deemed to have expired. When such notification expires the powers conferred by this Act shall cease to be in force.'

"My Lord, it is not concealed from you what alarm this Bill has created in the country, and particularly Part II. My Hon'ble friends, the previous speakers, have already pointed this out, and it was for these reasons that they asked for the deletion of this Part. The next best was asked for by my Hon'ble friends Messrs. Khaparde and Patel, but this also has not been conceded. This is the third best that I am now asking for.

"My Lord, the object of this amendment is practically the same as that of the amendment just moved by my Hon'ble friends Messrs. Patel and Khaparde, and I fully associate myself with all that they have said on the subject, particularly as regards the probable danger of giving the Executive an altogether free hand in a matter so serious and delicate as this. My Lord, Part II contains provisions of a very drastic nature. Thereby we are substituting an executive inquiry for a judicial trial, and further arming the executive with extraordinary powers to take away the rights and liberties of the people. The interest of the whole country as also of Government demands that such an action of the Executive Government should be scrutinised and adequate safeguards imposed upon their action especially in a matter which involves the abrogation of all the accepted principles of British law and justice.

"It is a sound maxim of politics as enunciated by Lord Macaulay, that eminent English Jurist, that 'since we cannot, without the risk of evil from which the imagination recoils, employ physical force as a check on misgovernment, it is evidently our wisdom to keep all the constitutional checks on misgovernment in the highest state of efficiency to watch with jealousy the first beginning of encroachment and never to suffer irregularities even when harmless in themselves to pass unchallenged lest they acquire the force of precedents' It is, my Lord, such a constitutional check upon the executive action of the Government that I wish to be imposed. I do not ask the Government to accept any novel principle of law or practice; rather, I urge upon them to bring the provisions of this law into conformity with the law and practice as obtaining in the United Kingdom and Ireland. The provision which I want to be inserted in this section already finds place in the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1837 (50 and 51 Vict., ch. 20) in clause 6 which reads thus :

‘(2) A copy of every special proclamation shall be laid before each House of Parliament within seven days after the making thereof, if Parliament is then sitting and if not, within seven days after the next meeting of Parliament.’

“It also provides that—

‘(5) When a special proclamation expires or is revoked, the powers conferred by the seventh section of this Act shall for the time being cease to be in force in respect of the association or associations as to which such special proclamation has expired or been revoked, etc., etc.’

“Well, my Lord, if such is the law in Ireland why should not a similar provision be made here in this Act? My suggestion would not cause any inconvenience to the executive, as the executive will be quite at liberty to take action under this section should a case of emergency arise, even without any previous reference to the Legislative Council, but what I am very particular about is that the executive should be under an obligation to submit their proposals and notification to the Legislative Council. The matter, my Lord, is so serious, so grave, so disquieting, involving as it does a question of life and death to the people, that it is but proper that their accredited representatives, your Councillors, should have an opportunity of discussing the pros and cons of the whole question and be convinced of the necessity of the extraordinary legislation you deem necessary in order to meet extraordinary circumstances. My Lord, you should not be suspicious of the non-official members of your Council at least that they will not support you in the nick of time. The past record of this Council should encourage you, I think, to have confidence in us. During the war time whatever stringent and repressive measures you proposed, they received our unanimous consent and support, and on no previous occasion have the non-official members of this Council failed you at any critical moment. It is only a few months back that you asked us to vote for 45 millions of the war expenditure and left the decision to us, and what was the result? We approved of it and did so against the wishes of the people of the country and with the full knowledge that a poor country like India could but ill-afford to incur that huge expenditure. So, my Lord, you have no reason to be nervous on that account. Have confidence in your Legislative Council and take it from me, my Lord, that the Council will not fail you. Rather by enlisting public opinion on your side you will be strengthening your own hands, and the operation of the Act will be very much facilitated. Certainly it would be a distinct advantage to the executive Government if their action were confirmed by the Legislative Council, as they would then have the support of the representative opinion of the people at their back.

“With these words, my Lord, I move this amendment and hope it will be accepted.”

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“My Lord, I have fully discussed already both yesterday and this morning my reasons in support of this amendment, which I beg to formally move. 2.30 P.M.

“That to clause 20 the following provisos be added :—

‘Provided that no action shall be taken by the Governor General in Council, without giving the Indian Legislative Council or the Legislative Council of the province in respect of which such a notification is proposed to be made an opportunity of expressing its opinion by a resolution passed on the subject.

‘Provided further that such notification shall at any time after the expiry of one year from the date thereof be withdrawn on the recommendation of the Indian Legislative Council or the Legislative Council of the province in respect of which it may have been made by a resolution passed by three-fifths of the members of either of the said Councils.’

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Mr. J. J. Patel ; [14TH MARCH, 1919.]
Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; The President.]

"This is a preventive measure, where the scheduled offences are not yet prevalent, the amendment is suggested to ensure that the people should have due warning and that the Council should have an opportunity of expressing its opinion. I believe I need add no further argument in support of my amendment."

'The motion was put and negatived.

2-34 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause 20 for the words 'scheduled offences' the words 'offences against the State' be substituted.'

"The amended clause would read thus :—

'If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that anarchical or revolutionary movements, which are in his opinion, likely to lead to the commission of offences against the State, are being extensively promoted in the whole or any part of British India, etc. etc.'

"My Lord, in the Bill as introduced in this Council, clause 20 contained the words 'offences against the State.' The offences against the State are 10 or 11 in number according to the Indian Penal Code. The scheduled offences, my Lord, are numerous. This change has been made by the Select Committee. We have been told times out of number that the Select Committee have made several alterations in the Bill as it stood when introduced. I grant that they did make several alterations in the Bill; but I contend, my Lord, that all those amendments are on non-essentials. The only amendment on any important point is the one that we are now considering.

"It is a boon that comes to the country from the Select Committee, call it a concession if you like; and I on behalf of the country respectfully decline to accept that boon or that concession. I say, please put us back where we were when the Bill was introduced, and we shall be thankful to the Select Committee and your Excellency's Government and this Council too."

2-35 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"My Lord, I have got the same thing in slightly different language, and think that if my Hon'ble friend, Mr Patel will just consider the point he will see that the words in my amendment ought to be accepted in preference to his amendment. My amendment is :—

'That in clause 20 for the words 'scheduled offences' the words 'offences under Chapter VI (other than an offence under section 124-A) and sections 131 and 132 of the Indian Penal Code' be substituted.'

"My Lord, 'scheduled offences' occurs in the original Bill in this clause and my Hon'ble friend evidently wants this reinstated; but there is another thing; when this term found place in this clause in the original Bill there was the definition of 'scheduled offence' given in clause 1 where we find that scheduled offence is 'Any offence under Chapter VI (i.e., including 124-A) and sections 131 and 132 of the Indian Penal Code.' But in revising this Bill the Select Committee have omitted the definition of scheduled offences, and in the list of scheduled offences they have inserted about 50 offences as I described it the day before yesterday. Under these circumstances, by reason of the fact that a new definition of scheduled offences has been inserted in the Bill and it will be necessary to adopt the definition which I have suggested in my amendment in place of 'scheduled offences' of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Patel. With these remarks, I move my amendment."

His Excellency the President :—"Do you accept it, Mr. Patel?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I have no objection, my Lord, to accepting it."

His Excellency the President :—"Do you withdraw your amendment in favour of Mr. Chanda?"

[14TH MARCH, 1919] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; The President.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I would rather move the amended amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda's amendment was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 20 as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 21 as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"May I draw your Lordship's attention to No. 95? It is really a part of this amendment, and I think it ought to go with it. No. 88 deals with the whole clause and 95 with one part of it."

His Excellency the President:—"Do you wish to reserve your remarks on this amendment till you come to 95?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I want to move these together. It is the same clause; I do not know how this came to be separated from the other."

His Excellency the President:—"I do not know whether any embarrassment will be caused by putting these two amendments together."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I think it will remove embarrassment."

His Excellency the President:—"Well, you must take it upon your own head."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, then I move this amendment:— 2-50 P.M.

That in clause 21 (1) for the words 'by order in writing containing a declaration to that effect give all or any of the following directions, namely, that such persons' the following shall be substituted:—

Either itself or through any officer authorised in that behalf apply to the investigating authority hereinafter mentioned having jurisdiction in the area concerned for an order giving directions specified either in clause (a) or in clauses (b) to (e) or in any one of those clauses against any person, and such investigating authority after taking such application into consideration and such other or further materials if any which it may call for may pass an order either calling upon such person to show cause within a certain time named by it why he should not carry out such directions or pass an order calling upon him provisionally to carry out such direction or directions and show cause why such order should not be made absolute.

'(a) And in the same clause—for the word 'shall' in sub-clause (a) the words 'to execute' be substituted and the word 'execute' be deleted.

'(b) For the word 'shall' in sub-clauses (b) to (e) when that word occurs for the first time the word 'to' be substituted.

'(c) In sub-clause (d) the words 'in the opinion of the Local Government' be deleted and the word 'reasonably' be inserted before the word 'calculated'.

'That in clause 21 (1) for the words 'give all' the words 'give the directions in clause (a)' and for the words 'following directions' the word 'directions' in clauses (b) to (e) be substituted.'

"If these amendments are incorporated in the clause, my Lord, it will read like this:—

'21 (1) Where, in the opinion of the Local Government, there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20, the Local Government may either itself or through any officer authorised in that behalf, apply to the investigating authority hereinafter mentioned having jurisdiction in the area concerned for an order giving directions specified either in clause (a)

or in clauses (b) to (e) or in any one of those clauses against any person, and such investigating authority after taking such application into consideration and such other or further materials, if any, which it may call for may pass an order either calling upon such person to show cause within a certain time named by it why he should not carry out such directions or pass an order calling upon him provisionally to carry out such direction or directions and show cause why such order should not be made absolute.

(a) to execute within such period as may be specified in the order a bond with or without sureties undertaking, for such period not exceeding one year as may be so specified, that he will not commit, or attempt or conspire to commit, or abet the commitment of, any offence against any provision of the law which is referred to in the Schedule ;

(b) to notify his residence and any change of residence to such authority as may be so specified ;

(c) to remain or reside in any area in British India so specified :

Provided that, if the area so specified is outside the province, the concurrence of the Local Government of that area to the making of the order shall first have been obtained ;

(d) to abstain from any act so specified which is reasonably calculated to disturb the public peace or is prejudicial to the public safety ; and

(e) to report himself to the officer in charge of the police-station nearest to his residence at such periods as may be so specified.'

"My Lord, I shall confess at once that the object of this amendment is to destroy the principle of the Bill. My object is to take away the machinery by which you propose to arm the executive with powers of the judiciary to punish a man yourself and then call upon an investigating authority to inquire into the matter. I need not dilate upon this at any length ; it has been more than once dilated upon. My object, my Lord, is to maintain, to establish permanently the British tone of administration of justice, not of the administration—that is a phrase I do not understand, it is unintelligible to me as I said in the evidence before the Royal Commission—but I wish to maintain the British tone of administration of justice.

"I said in my evidence before the Commission that we wish to maintain the British tone of justice, and my amendment is drawn up with that object. This clause is designed to arm the executive with power. It says :—

' (b) shall notify his residence and any change of residence to such authority as may be so specified,

(c) shall remain or reside in any area in British India so specified,

(d) shall abstain from any act so specified which in the opinion of the Local Government is calculated to disturb the public peace or is prejudicial to the public safety ; and

(e) shall report himself to the officer in charge of the police-station nearest to his residence at such periods as may be so specified.'

"Now, my Lord, I maintain that the circumstances have changed from what they were formerly. I put it to the Council, are the recommendations which might have been suitable twelve months ago suitable now ? The circumstances which gave rise to the law have changed and therefore the recommendations of the Committee do not maintain their same force, to put it as low as that, as they did last year. Then there is a point which seems to have inadvertently come in. You say in clause 21 'where in the opinion of the Local Government . . . the Local Government may by order in writing containing a declaration to that effect give all or any of the following directions :—(a) (b) (c) (d) and (e).' Now the man will come under the orders from (b) to (e), then what is the necessity of the order under (a) ? I do not think I need say more on the point."

2-52 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"My Lord, I think it would be convenient at this stage if we could clearly understand whether there is any chance of Government accepting the principles upon which a number of our amendments are based. It will be time enough to discuss them if the principles

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir William Vincent; Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir George Lowndes.]

are accepted. I take it, my Lord, that the first part of this amendment deals with the question as to whether an investigation should precede the interim order of the Government or succeed it. It is the first part of the amendment. A large number of us are of opinion that it would be safer and in consonance with the expediency of the matter if the Government armed themselves with the opinion of the investigating authority before it passed an order of its own on the subject. The accused person would be prejudiced to a certain extent by reason of the interim order of such an authoritative body as the Local Government. Practically the same materials which the Government has in its possession upon which to pass its orders will be placed before the investigating authority; therefore it will be a mere repetition of the procedure adopted with reference to the Rowlatt Committee. The Government had certain materials on hand; they had the opinions of the Local Government

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise to make a 2-54 P.M. personal explanation? The Hon'ble Member said it would be helpful if I gave certain information. I am prepared to accept an amendment on the lines of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's amendment No. 89, it corresponds very nearly with the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment No. 90 and provides that the Local Government before making a preliminary order should lay the papers before a judicial officer. I may say, however, that we do not propose to convert the investigating authority into a judicial authority."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My amendment is similar to the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's. Will the Hon'ble the Home Member say if he has any objection to have mine instead of Mr. Sastri's?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I have accepted Mr. Sastri's; it is the one that seemed most suitable."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May we still suggest that the Government should be pleased to consider whether they will act on the recommendations of the investigating authority. I am suggesting that it may be inconvenient to the investigating authority as well as to the accused person to have two decisions against him instead of one as is proposed in the Bill. The Local Government would place the materials before the Sessions Judge or an officer of that standing. The only object served thereby would be to weigh the evidence and matters of that description. I take it that the Local Government would have many officers who are accustomed to weigh evidence and who know as much law as an ordinary Sessions Judge. There is also the difficulty that the learned Sessions Judge would have only an ex-parte statement made before him and not the materials furnished by both sides and, therefore ordinarily he would arrive at practically the same conclusion as the Local Government, that is the Local Government would be fortified by the previous recommendation of the Sessions Judge."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I was asked by the Hon'ble Member to give an explanation on a point and when I do so he proceeds to base his arguments on an amendment which has not yet been moved."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I am only asking the Hon'ble the Home Member to consider whether it is possible to extend the concession further, and instead of taking the opinion of the Sessions Judge, we think the Government might take the opinion of the investigating authority."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"The Hon'ble Member is not entitled to speak on an amendment which is not before the Council. The amendment before the Council is that moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I shall confine myself to the point. It really is whether any advice is to be taken by the Local Government prior to passing its order. That is one point, the other is whose advice is to be taken? I say that previous advice should be taken before an order is passed by the Local Government. I ask for the acceptance of that principle. I go further and say that the principle would be practically nugatory unless it be the opinion of a person who can weigh the materials on both sides and then come to a decision and advise the Government as to what is to be done. I do not want a double procedure and a triple procedure merely lengthening the proceedings and doing no good to anybody. I want a simple procedure, a practicable procedure, a speedy procedure, a procedure that is likely to attain the objects which we have in view. Go straight to some authority, get as speedy a trial as possible, let the Local Government make up its mind and let the decision be final for the purposes of this Court and I can understand it: I therefore request that that principle which is embodied in the first part of the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda's amendment may be accepted."

2-56 P.M.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"My Lord, I would advise my friend, Mr. Chanda, to withdraw his amendment in favour of the amendment which stands in the name of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sastri, and my reason is a very simple one. The idea embodied in the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda's amendment was very carefully considered by some of us at the time when the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's amendment was drafted, and of the two courses proposed, one by Mr. Chanda and the other by Mr. Sastri, the one proposed by Mr. Sastri was preferred for a very obvious reason to that which the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda proposes, that before action is taken under Part II, the Local Government shall move the investigating authority to pass, so to speak, an ad interim order before the final inquiry is held and the order is passed. Now the danger of this procedure is an obvious one. If the Local Government places all the material in its possession before the investigating authority, and the investigating authority after careful consideration of those materials passes an ad interim order, it may to a certain extent have prejudged the accused person who is to be dealt with under Part II. While if the course suggested by Mr. Sastri is adopted, the Local Government will place the material in its possession before the District and Sessions Judge and take his opinion thereon, and after having taken his opinion it will pass an ad interim order. So that in resorting to the procedure suggested by Mr. Sastri the person to be proceeded against is in no way prejudged so far as his ultimate enquiry into the case by the investigating authority is concerned, and I am sure that my Hon'ble friend will see that it is far better that the case should be placed before the investigating authority without the investigating authority having any preconceived ideas whatsoever with regard to his case rather than they should prejudge him before dealing with it. And I would also request my friend, Mr. Patel, to withdraw his amendment in favour of that of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri for a very simple reason. He would make the action of the Local Government depend on the previous approval of the District and Sessions Judge of the district. Now the District and Sessions Judge of the district to which the person concerned may belong obviously is in touch with the local atmosphere which may possibly, I say possibly, prejudice his case. There is the danger of the District and Sessions Judge knowing something about his case before he gives an opinion on the requisition of the Local Government. Therefore it is far better that the Local Government may, if it thinks fit, be in a position to consult the District and Sessions Judge other than the district judge of the place to which the accused person may belong, than that the Local Government should by Statute be compelled to consult only the district judge of the district in which the accused person resides. I hope my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Chanda, will, on consideration of the point I have placed before him, withdraw his amendment in favour of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's amendment."

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—" My Lord, as a reference has been made to my amendment by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi

His Excellency the President:—" Wait a minute, Mr. Patel. I was wrong in allowing Mr. Shafi to refer to your amendment. I think it will be time when we come to your amendment. At the present moment we are on Mr. Chanda's amendment.

"Now, Mr. Chanda, you can go on."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—" My Lord, with ^{3-1 P.M.} all respect to my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Shafi, I find it difficult to accept his suggestion for this reason. While the Hon'ble the Home Member looks upon the right of the executive to assume powers of the judiciary as the frame-work of its machinery, I look upon it as a principle to see that the executive will in no way assume the powers and functions of the judiciary. With regard to the suggestion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Shafi, that if the matter is placed before the investigating authority in the first instance it would be to the disadvantage of the accused, as the investigating authority will have formed an opinion and that will prejudice the accused person, my answer is that it is not so. This is the practice which obtains in regard to complaints before Magistrates. The Magistrate after hearing the story of the complainant, if he thinks fit, issues a process against the accused, and this fact does not certainly prejudice the case of the accused, because it is only after hearing both sides, that the Magistrate forms his judgment. For these reasons I am sorry I cannot accept the suggestion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Shafi. "

His Excellency the President:—" The question is that the following amendment be made in the Bill :—

' That in clause 21 (1) for the words ' by order in writing ' containing a declaration to that effect give all or any of the following directions, namely: that such persons' the following words be substituted :—

' Either itself or through any officer authorised in that behalf apply to the investigating authority hereinafter mentioned having jurisdiction in the area concerned for an order giving directions specified either in clause (a) or in clauses (b) to (e) or in any one of those clauses against any person, and such investigating authority after taking such application into consideration and such other or further particulars if any which it may call for may pass an order either calling upon such person to show cause within a certain time named by it why he should not carry out such directions or pass an order calling upon him provisionally to carry out such direction or directions and show cause why such order should not be made absolute.

(a) And in the same clause for the word ' shall ' in sub-clause (a) the words ' to execute ' be substituted and the word ' execute ' be deleted.

(b) For the word ' shall ' in sub-clauses (b) to (e) when that word occurs for the first time the word ' to ' be substituted.

(c) In sub-clause (d) the words ' in the opinion of the Local Government ' be deleted and the word ' reasonably ' be inserted before the word ' calculated. '

For the words ' give all ' the words ' give the directions in clause (a) ' and for the words ' following directions ' the words ' directions in clauses (b) to (e) ' be substituted.

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—" My Lord, I move the ^{3-3 P.M.} amendment that stands in my name—

' That in clause 21 (1) for the words ' may by order in writing ' containing a declaration to that effect ' the following words be substituted :—

' Shall place all the materials in its possession relating to his case before a judicial officer not below the rank of a District and Sessions Judge and take his opinion thereon. After considering such opinion, the Local Government, if it is satisfied that such action is necessary, may, by order in writing containing a declaration to the effect that such person is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20 '.

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri; Sir William Vincent; The President; Mr. V. J. Patel; Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

"I do not think it is necessary to read it. The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi in speaking to the former amendment has explained fully the purpose of my amendment, and as I understand the Hon'ble the Home Member is willing to accept its principle and has carefully put it in improved language, I think I need do nothing more than place it before the Council".

3-5 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I am prepared to accept the substance of this amendment. I suggest an altered form so as to make the officer before whom the papers are laid a judge of somewhat higher status. The amendment, if the Hon'ble Member would accept the modified form, would run thus :—

'May place all the materials in its possession relating to his case before a judicial officer who is qualified for appointment to the High Court and take his opinion thereon.'

"That is, the officer must not only be a judge but one who has served as such for three years. I am unable to accept the exact term 'District and Sessions Judge' for the reason that the headquarters of the Local Governments of three Presidencies at least are situated in places where there are no District and Sessions Judges. I have therefore taken a judicial officer of three years' standing. I hope that will meet the Hon'ble Member."

His Excellency the President :—"Mr. Patel, do you wish to make any remarks?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"My amendment is quite different Your Excellency."

The following motion was put and agreed to :—

'That in clause 21 (1) for the words 'may by order in writing containing a declaration to that effect' the following words be substituted :—

'May place all the materials in its possession relating to his case before a judicial officer who is qualified for appointment to the High Court and take his opinion thereon. After considering such opinion, the Local Government, if it is satisfied that such action is necessary, may, by order in writing containing a declaration to the effect that such person is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20'."

3-7 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"Your Excellency, I beg to move that in clause 21 (1) after the words 'the Local Government may' the words 'with the previous approval of the District and Sessions Judge of the district' be added. As the previous amendment has been accepted by Government, I do not think it would be possible for Government, even if they are willing, to accept this amendment. The point I wanted to make really is this. If you are going to take the opinion of a judicial officer who is qualified to be appointed as a High Court Judge, I ask you whether you will not consent to be bound to accept that opinion. I say it is no use taking the opinion of a judicial officer of that standing if you are not prepared to accept that opinion. I therefore move the amendment and trust the Council will consider it."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, in view of what has already taken place over Mr. Sastri's amendment, it is obviously impossible that the Government should accept the present one of Mr. Patel's."

The motion was put and negatived.

3-9 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul :—"My Lord, I beg to move that in clause 21 (1) after the words 'declaration to that effect' the following words be inserted :—

'Lay information before a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction in the area and the said Magistrate may on being satisfied of the truth of the information by following the procedure laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code for demanding security.'

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

“ Clause 21, sub-clause (1) will then read thus :—

‘ (1) Where, in the opinion of the Local Government, there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20, the Local Government may lay information before a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction in the area and the said Magistrate may, if satisfied of the truth of the information by following the procedure laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code for demanding security.’

“ My Lord, so far as the first portion of my amendment is concerned, the principle involved in it has already been accepted by the Government. Now what I have asked for is only that if the Local Government finds that there are reasonable grounds to proceed against any person under this section, the matter should be referred to a 1st Class Magistrate and should be entirely left to him for disposal. My Lord, the principle that an inquiry under the orders of the Executive Government should merely supplement and not supplant the judicial inquiry has been thoroughly discussed, and I will not dwell on the point any further. If my suggestion is accepted, it will simplify the procedure and will be in strict accordance with the spirit of the law.”

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“ My Lord, I beg 3-11 P.M. to move that in clause 21 (1) after the word ‘bond’ in sub-clause (a) the words ‘in such amounts as may be prescribed,’ be inserted and sub-clauses (c) and (e) be deleted.

“ I ask specifically that the Local Government may prescribe the amounts in which the bond should be executed so that there may be no doubt on the point. I find on referring to clause 31 (1) that the rule-making power gives the Local Government power to prescribe the authorities before whom and the manner in which the bond under this Part shall be executed. I think there would be some difficulty as to the amounts in which bonds should be executed, and I think it would be better if the Local Government when it issues an interim order, asking an accused person to execute a bond, prescribe clearly the amount in which such bond should be executed. That is the first part. Then, my Lord, I lay special emphasis upon the deletion of clause (c). The Government is to be empowered, in passing an interim order, to ask that a person ‘shall remain or reside in any area in British India so specified :

Provided that, if the area so specified is outside the province, the concurrence of the Local Government of that area to the making of the order shall first have been obtained’.

“ I have already alluded to the fact that Part II relates to a less serious state of circumstances where there is no large prevalence of crime connected with revolutionary or anarchical movements, and we are now dealing with interim orders. I would respectfully submit that it would be extremely inconvenient if the Government should pass any orders before the investigating authority of the place makes its recommendations. If a person is to be sent away, say from Madras to Assam under this interim order, it would be rather difficult for him to conduct his proceedings under clause 25 before the investigating authority. You may tell me such a thing is not likely to happen. If such a thing is not likely to happen, I hope you will concede that the power need not be given. I also submit that it is a very drastic power, and that it should not be employed at this stage or under this Part of the Act.

“ Such powers may be needed if there is a large prevalence of crime, but in providing for preventive measures, I hope the Government will not ask for power enabling them to deport or imprison a person, especially without making any provision whatsoever for that person maintaining himself or his family. These are some of the practical concrete difficulties I find in the legislature agreeing to this power being given under sub-clause (c).

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Sir William Vincent ; Mr. W. A. Ironside.]

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

" Then, my Lord, I think under this Part the command to notify his residence and any change of residence, which would be attended with the penalty of imprisonment and fine if a breach thereof is committed, is amply sufficient, and a person need not be asked to report himself to an officer in charge of the police-station in the first instance.

" Well, I do not lay so much stress upon sub-clause (e), but I hope Government will be able to concede my request in respect of sub-clause (c) and also fix the amount of the bond, with or without sureties, which a person has to execute."

3-16 P M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, the drafting of the clause as to the furnishing of bonds I think follows exactly the drafting of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It seems to me, my Lord, unnecessary that the Local Government should prescribe by rule the amount of a bond which it is itself going to demand. There is very little difference between fixing it by rule or by order. Therefore, I suggest to the Hon'ble Member that the first modification which he proposes in the Bill would really make very little difference.

" The other points which he mentions are that he wishes to delete sub-clauses (c) and (e). Well, in embodying these sub-clauses in the Bill we followed exactly what the Rowlatt Committee recommended and we adopted what we know to have been a very effective if not a severe form of restraint

" My Hon'ble friend is naturally anxious that the well-being of any person detained away from his home should be considered. We do provide for their support—I believe I am correct in this—if I am not correct I shall have to withdraw it, but I have every reason to think that I am correct—we also have Visiting Committees to see them and to make recommendations to the Local Government as to any changes that are necessary to secure the welfare of the persons interned. I do not think we can make this provision more lenient."

3-19 P M

The Hon'ble Mr. W. A. Ironside :—" May I just rise to make an explanation. The Hon'ble the Home Member has given a few details as to what is done on behalf of these young men, let me amplify this information. A little while ago the police called on me and asked me to give two of these young anarchists a fresh start in life ; I agreed and together we hope to do this "

3-20 P M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, with reference to the first part of my amendment I request the Hon'ble the Home Member to reconsider the question.

" Section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code directs that, when a Magistrate acts under this section, ' he shall make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, etc.' It is of some importance as to whether the discretion is in the hands of Local Government or of some officer before whom the man may be directed to appear. In the first place, I submit the order is to be served on the accused person ; the order will be the order of the Local Government, the officer has simply to carry it out. Therefore, the order would be incomplete unless the amount is inserted therein. That was the reason why I suggested that it might perhaps be made clear that the Local Government should look into it. It may not be done by rule because the amount is to be fixed in each case, and I want that the discretion should be in the hands of the Local Government which would ordinarily have regard to any reports which they might receive from the officers subordinate to it.

" Then, with regard to sub-clause (c), I took it that the Hon'ble the Home Member said that provision would be made by the Government for the subsistence of the persons who may be directed to reside in special localities where it might be difficult for them to carry on their customary professions. At any rate I so took it ; but I am not able to see any specific provision in this Bill.

14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir William Vincent; The President; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

and the Visiting Committees which are provided for under clause 30 are simply to report upon the welfare and treatment of persons under restraint under this Bill. Clause 30 says that the Local Government 'shall by rules prescribe the functions which these Committees shall exercise.' I do not think that these Committees are going to be given funds by the Local Government to administer them. It may be that that is contemplated, but I do not think that power is given here to the Local Government to entrust funds to these Committees for the purpose of looking after the welfare and treatment of persons under restraint. If that is to be the object

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise to explain? I never suggested anything of the kind."

His Excellency the President:—"Did the Hon'ble Member hear what the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent said."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My object is to compel Local Governments to provide the means whereby the Visiting Committees can look after the welfare and treatment of persons interned."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"May it please your Excellency, I beg to move the following amendment:—

'That for sub-clause (d) of 21 (1) the following be substituted:—

'(d) shall abstain from any act so specified which, in the opinion of the Local Government is likely to lead to the commission of scheduled offences.'

The clause at present reads thus:—

'Shall abstain from any act so specified which, in the opinion of the Local Government is calculated to disturb the public peace or is prejudicial to the public safety.'

"My Lord, I feel confident that this small amendment will be accepted by the Hon'ble the Home Member. It is contended that the intention of the Government in enacting this Part is to deal with anarchical or revolutionary movements which are likely to lead to the commission of scheduled offences. When a person is dealt with under clause 21 of this Part by the Local Government they should have power to pass any order which is consistent with the avowed object referred to in clauses 20 and 21. The proposed sub-clause says the man 'shall abstain from any act so specified which, in the opinion of the Local Government is calculated to disturb the public peace or is prejudicial to the public safety.'

"I desire by this amendment to make the intention of Government clear by restricting the sub-clause (d) to acts likely to lead to the commission of scheduled offences. I am sure my Hon'ble friend the Home Member will accept this amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I thought the Hon'ble Member was well aware what the position was in regard to this. May I refer him to the Report of the Committee where they elaborate the powers to be taken. Among the first group of powers he will find the power to require abstention from certain acts, such as engaging in journalism, distributing leaflets or attending meetings. Well, in the Bill as it was originally introduced, we followed the recommendation as closely as we could. The matter was discussed, if my memory serves me right, in the Select Committee when we decided, after careful consideration, to limit this power to acts which are calculated to disturb the public peace or to be prejudicial to the public safety . . .

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I rise to a point of order, my Lord? The discussions in Select Committee are sometimes utilised by way of argument to tell us that the whole question has been discussed in Select Committee while objection is taken at other times. But I take it that what happens in the Select Committee, unless it appears in the report of the Select Committee, must be treated as confidential?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" If I have erred against the rules, I can only express my regret, but I only want to draw attention to the changes in the Bill made in Select Committee. And the reason for my making the statement was that I was a little surprised by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's suggestion that I was certain to accept this amendment. The position is this. If it is found that revolutionary movements are being promoted and such movements are likely to lead to the commission of scheduled offences, and that a particular person is actively engaged in these movements, the Government may think it necessary to prohibit him from specific acts—no general or vague order is allowed—likely to disturb the public peace or endanger the public safety. I submit to the Council that this is not an unreasonable power for the Local Government to have in the circumstances."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Your Excellency, I did say I was confident the Hon'ble the Home Member would accept this amendment, because I hear it suggested so often that the intention of the Government in enacting this law is to deal with revolutionary and anarchical movements only. Therefore, I was inclined to think that the amendment would find favour with my Hon'ble friend the Home Member. If the clause is left as it stands, people will be justified in drawing their own inferences."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause 21 (2) for the words 'may also' the word 'shall' be substituted, and after the word 'effect' the word 'only' be inserted.'

"The clause will then run thus :—

'Any order under clauses (b) to (e) shall be made to take effect only upon default by the person concerned in complying with an order under clause (a).'

"What I want, my Lord, is that the accused person should be given a chance of giving security for his good conduct, and that the other clauses should be made to take effect only if he fails to execute a bond, with or without sureties, of such amount as may be prescribed. I think it is a very reasonable request that the man shall not be harassed by being asked to notify his residence, to go to a police-station and so on, if he can furnish security to the authorities that he will keep the peace and be of good behaviour."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I think the Hon'ble Member is somewhat in error in stating that the Bill provides for security being taken to keep the peace and be of good behaviour. If I recollect rightly, the undertaking in these cases is not to commit particular offences. The words relating to a bond for general good behaviour were specifically deleted by the Select Committee and the Hon'ble Member is in error in thinking that the bond can be required in those terms. I think he will agree also that taking a bond alone not to commit certain offences is an insufficient precaution in the case of a determined evil-minded person. As a matter of fact, we have now, I am glad to say, taken security either in the shape of personal bonds or in some cases with security as well, from many young men who have been reformed up to a certain point, and many of them are now working and earning their living under very much better conditions. But it is one of the mildest forms of restraint imposed. In certain cases, where men are of a more dangerous character, we have, either in addition or in substitution of that, to subject them to some of the other restrictions which are named in the clause, and which can also be imposed on these men under the Defence of India Rules. The particular restriction which he suggests is often the last minor restriction imposed before a man is altogether released. We take a personal bond from him for his good behaviour, and as soon as he has been of good behaviour for a short time, we remove that and let him go altogether."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"The only point is, inasmuch as you will be asking the person concerned to give a bond not to commit, or attempt or conspire to commit, or abet the commitment of, the offences described in the Schedule, that will be practically tantamount to asking him to keep the peace and be of good behaviour. There may be a few other offences not strictly falling within the section, but the main point is secured."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 21 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, and as further amended, stand part of the Bill, was put and agreed to.

His Excellency the President:—"I must rule No. 96,* Mr. Shukul's amendment, out of order. It is open to Mr. Shukul to take the negative on every one of these clauses which will be put separately."

*That in Part II, clauses 22 to 31 be deleted.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul:—"I do not desire to move the amendment, my Lord."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 22 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 23 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, stand as part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, with 3-35 P.M. regard to my next amendment—

'That in clause 23, the words 'a copy of' and the words 'by or under the general or special authority of the Local Government' be deleted, and after the word 'all' the word 'lawful' be inserted.'

The Council not having accepted my amendment as regards clause 21, the former part of this amendment falls to the ground, so it will have to be deleted, and I only move the last portion:—

'That after the word 'all' the word 'lawful' be inserted.'

"I do not know whether the Hon'ble the Home Member will accept it. The clause as it stands says 'all means necessary to enforce compliance with the same.'

"It might include, my Lord, a constable using a baton or lathi as soon as he is required to carry out the order; that could not be meant, and I think it is better to make it clear. Therefore, I move that the word 'lawful' be used with the word 'all', so that you may use all lawful means necessary to enforce compliance with the order."

[Sir George Lowndes; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. V. J. Patel; The President; Sir William Vincent.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

3-36 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, it might be convenient if Mr. Patel's amendment were taken along with this. I am prepared to agree to the insertion of the word 'reasonable' before 'necessary', which I think will really meet my Hon'ble friend."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I move my amendment, my Lord, that in clause 23 for the words 'use all means necessary,' the words 'use all lawful means reasonably necessary' be substituted."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I hope my Hon'ble friend understood that I cannot accept the word 'lawful'; but I am quite willing to accept the word 'reasonable' before 'necessary.'"

His Excellency the President:—"Do you withdraw your amendment, Mr. Chanda?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Yes."

His Excellency the President:—"Are you willing to accept?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I am not willing to accept the amendment suggested."

The Hon'ble Mr. Patel's motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I move, my Lord, that after the words 'all means' the word 'reasonably' be inserted."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The motion that clause 23 as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I move that clause 24 do stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I beg to move, my Lord, that clause 24 be deleted."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"If this is amendment 99, I submit that it is out of order."

The motion that clause 24 stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; The President ; Sir George Lowndes.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 25 as amended by the Select Committee do stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I move this amendment to clause 25—

'That for clause 25 the following clause be substituted : . . . '

"I do not know, my Lord, if it is allowed in consequence of my amendment as regards clause 21 being rejected because this will stand only if that has been accepted. I think, however, this will, under the circumstances, stand."

His Excellency the President:—"Is this a corollary to Mr Chanda's amendment on clause 21(1) ?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I do not think it can stand, my Lord, if the other was not there."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I think it can 3-39 P.M. go in with the clause as it stands ; there is no harm ; if you pass the order then this procedure will be adopted. I think it can go in ; it is not out of order. I beg to move—

'That for clause 25 the following clause be substituted :—

'25. (1) On the day fixed for showing cause by the person in respect of whom an order under section 21 has been passed the investigating authority shall inquire into the matter and shall follow the procedure, as early as practicable, that is prescribed for trials in summons cases excepting that instead of convicting or acquitting the person proceeded against it shall record its conclusions as to whether it is established to its satisfaction that such person is or has been actively concerned in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20, and if so, what in its opinion would be a proper order to pass against him. The investigating authority shall submit their report to the Local Government and direct the said person to appear on a date fixed before such officer as the Local Government directs.

'(2) The Local Government on receipt of the report of the investigating authority shall after reciting its findings either discharge him if the finding is in his favour, or if the finding is against him, pass an order directing him to carry out the direction contained in clause (a) or any one of clauses (b) to (e) of section 21.

'(3) Any order under clauses (b) to (e) of section 21 may be made to take effect upon default by the person concerned :

'Provided that if the investigating authority is not satisfied that the person is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement referred to in section 20 he shall be at once discharged.

'(4) The inquiry shall be held in public, provided that the investigating authority may direct that any portion of the proceedings be in camera.'

"My Lord, I do not wish to make any speech on this."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I think that 3-41 P.M. if I had not been somewhat familiar with the details of this Bill I should have had some difficulty in following exactly the meaning of this amendment. I think that any one who heard it as put forward now by the Hon'ble Member must have found it difficult to follow. But in any case as the amendment is really consequential to one which has been rejected by this Council, it is quite impossible to accept it. The very first words say 'on the day fixed for showing cause by the person'; well, no day has been fixed and the whole of this clause must necessarily go."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I do not know if the Hon'ble the Home Member is quite correct, because you ask him to show cause before the investigating authority. Well, the date is immaterial ; you have called on him to show cause and I only prescribe the procedure that is to be adopted by the investigating authority when the inquiry is made ; that is all I say ; the other things are very immaterial. The day is very immaterial ; the only thing is that this procedure should be adopted in place of the one which you have prescribed."

His Excellency the President:—"Don't you think you had better withdraw it ? There is some considerable doubt about it."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I prefer to take my chance, my Lord."

The motion was put and negatived.

3-42 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment which is as follows:—

'That in clause 25 (1) after the words 'as may be' the words 'and before the expiry of seven days from the making of the order' be inserted.'

"I move this amendment so that the man may know where he stands. I assume that the order should be passed within seven days. This is a small matter, but this along with others shows my anxiety that the investigation should be completed as soon as possible and that it may not be extended unnecessarily. Supposing there is a delay and the order is sent 24 or 25 days after it was made, there will have to be an extension of the period laid down, and it may in similar ways be extended indefinitely. This is a small matter but I leave it to the Government and hope it will be accepted."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Clause 21 of the Bill says 'When the Local Government makes an order under section 21 such Government shall as soon as may be' etc. I should have been glad if I could accept the proposal to place a specific limit of time such as is proposed, but the Hon'ble Member will no doubt appreciate the conditions and see that this reference may take a good deal of time. Local Governments have to get letters deciphered which is very difficult and troublesome ; it is well known that the revolutionaries carry on their correspondence in cipher, besides which their statements have to be verified, their antecedents and other material has to be collected from different parts of India. The Hon'ble Member shakes his head"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I was merely referring to the order already passed."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"We cannot always get the full information in seven days. We intend to do this as soon as may be, but we cannot guarantee that it will be done within seven days."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I beg to withdraw my amendment."

The motion was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment which runs as follows:—

'That to clause 25 (1) the following provisos be added:—

'Provided that the investigating authority shall have the power either of its own motion or on application by the person proceeded against to direct the production of any person whose statement or information may be included in the grounds of action taken by Government as aforesaid ; and on the appearance of such person he shall if required by the person proceeded against be put on oath and cross-examined :

'Provided further that if such person does not appear as directed the information or statement made by him will be excluded.'

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I think it would simplify matters if I read to the Council a part of the report by Messrs. Chandawarkar and Beachcroft on the case of the internees that they examined. From that it will be seen that the course proposed by the Hon'ble Member is really impossible. We know that directly the name of an informer is known his life is forfeit. It will be seen from the Report that there are several cases of murder, assassination and attempts on their lives directly it was known that an informer had come to give Government assistance. Messrs. Chandavarkar and Beachcroft say on the subject 'the records before us conclusively prove that the revolutionary organisations are secret conspiracies which have spread into different parts of the province, entered homes, schools and colleges and have reduced their secrecy of operations almost to scientific methods. They have pledged their members to the closest secrecy of their movements on pain of instant death by murder in the event of disclosure; that is one of their rules and every attempt has been made to give effect to it.' The same Commissioners go on to describe the state of terrorism which is created by this state of affairs by quoting a statement of an actual internee as follows 'there are many members who are members against their will and seek some escape from the bonds of the Samiti. They see no prospect. If they disobey the Samiti they will be shot.' These are the men that the Hon'ble Member seeks to produce for cross-examination by one of the revolutionaries. I do not think that Members of this Council can possibly support that, unless they wish to sacrifice the lives of those who are willing to support the Government. It has been said these men are all spies and informers, they are not; some are men who are assisting the Government; others are young men who have been misled into crime by the revolutionaries. An indication of the methods brought to bear is given in the Rowlatt Committee's report which I quote. The extract is part of a letter from one revolutionary to another. It runs as follows :—

'You should first win over by sweet words the boy of your place about whose character you have written and keep him neutral and if he proves a particular source of harm, extreme measures should be adopted in his case so as to leave no clue.'

"I think words like that speak for themselves. They are grim evidence of desperate treachery and intent to murder. In the circumstances, I hope that the Hon'ble Member will not press this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I fully appreciate the difficulty of the Hon'ble the Home Member, but what about the converse case. Supposing you have an informer who is a liar and is drawing on his imagination. This was the case when Rakhal Naha the informer in the Midnapore bomb case tried to swear away the lives and liberties of a large number of innocent persons when proceedings were taken against 153 persons including the leading gentlemen of the town. They were kept in confinement for days and days, then what happened? As soon as the man was put into the witness-box he had to admit that the whole thing was a myth. Lord Sinha, who was the prosecutor, withdrew the proceedings against the accused and obtained sanction to prosecute Rakhal for perjury. So it is necessary to provide for cases of that kind."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment which runs as follows :—

'That in clause 25 (2) the words 'in camera' and the words 'at some stage of its proceedings' be deleted, and that the words 'personally or by pleader' be inserted after the words 'before it.'"

"I submit that the accused should be permitted to have the assistance of a pleader, seeing that the proceedings against him affect his liberty. Many men will lose their heads if they have to go through the matter unaided by a lawyer. My Lord, I should like to place before the Council the remarks of Lord Morley in Volume II of his 'Recollections'. He says in it at page 257:

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; The President.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

'You say that great executive officers never like to trust the lawyers, I will tell you why it is, it is because they do not like or trust law'. In this connection there is one thing that strikes me, and it is this, that once a man ceases to be an official his words go for nothing.

"The Hon'ble the Home Member said these are the words of Sir Narayan Chandavarkar, but what about the same Chandavarkar who wrote articles in the Times of India, simply because he is no longer an official, his words count for nothing. It seems to me, my Lord, that as soon as individuals cease to be officials their opinions have little value to the Government. I do not see any reason why an accused should be deprived of the help of a lawyer. The only point I have heard is that there are many confidential matters which are likely to leak out if lawyers are allowed to assist the accused. Why do you think so? Have you not tried bomb cases with the help of lawyers, and can you give any instance in which confidential matters have leaked out by the lawyers concerned by divulging the secrets of bomb-making process? Why do you assume it? Of course, you may place any restrictions you think necessary to guard against confidential matters going out. Why do you think on purely imaginary grounds that the lawyers concerned will help leaking out of confidential matters? I submit, my Lord, you should not deprive an accused of the services of a lawyer without whom he cannot defend himself, and I submit that the accused ought to be allowed the services of a lawyer."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, I have an amendment almost to the same effect. It is No. 106 I shall move it, if your Excellency will permit me to do so."

His Excellency the President:—"Yes."

3-59 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"The amendment that stands in my name is this:—

'That in clause 25 (2) the words 'in camera' be deleted, for the word 'some' the word 'all' be substituted, and after the words 'in question' the words 'and his legal adviser' be inserted'.

"My reason for proposing this amendment is that the section directs that the investigating authority shall hold an inquiry in camera. What I desire to achieve by this amendment is, some discretion should be left to the investigating authority, that is to say, if they think that there are no matters in the inquiry which need be kept secret or confidential, then there is nothing to be gained by holding the inquiry in camera. I would leave the discretion to the investigating authority whether they should hold the inquiry in camera or not. I suppose somebody on behalf of Government will tell the investigating authority what matters are likely to come before them, and if there are matters in an inquiry which really require to be kept confidential, I have no doubt they will comply with the instructions of Government. But in other cases nothing will be gained in holding the inquiry in camera.

"Another thing that I do not understand is if the inquiry can be called an investigation at all. Because in an investigation the person charged usually knows what is going on, and I think his presence will always be useful.

"Now with regard to the assistance of a legal adviser to an accused, I quite agree with Mr. Chanda that the person involved in a criminal case of this kind would require to be advised by a professional lawyer, by a solicitor or a pleader, and to deprive a man of the help of a lawyer in a matter of this kind would practically mean no justice at all, because most of these people would not understand what is going on. In these circumstances, I also put forward my amendment under the same heading as Mr. Chanda's so that I may not have to speak again on it."

14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ My Lord, I have an amend- 4 P.M. ment No. 105 which is similar to the first part of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda's amendment, though I must say it is less ambitious than the one moved by my friend Mr. Khaparde. It reads thus :—

‘ That in clause 25 (2) for the words ‘ in camera ’ the following words be substituted :—

‘ Which may be in camera if such authority for reasons to be recorded in writing so decides ’.

“ Both my Hon'ble friends Mr. Chanda and Mr. Khaparde want to drop the words in camera. I say that I don't want these words to be dropped altogether. I would suggest that we should put in the words ‘ which may be in camera if such authority for reasons to be recorded in writing so decides ’.”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—“ My Lord, I withdraw my amendment and accept this amendment in place of mine.”

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi has an amendment No. 103, on the same lines as mine which suggests the insertion of the words ‘ which may in its discretion, be in whole or in part’. What I want really is that discretion must be left to the investigating authority to decide whether under certain circumstances the investigation should be held in camera or not. The clause as it stands leaves no discretion. It makes it imperative on the part of the investigating authority to hold every inquiry, every part of it, in fact all inquiries in camera and in no other way. That being so, I respectfully submit that if this inquiry, this investigation I should call it, is to have any significance, if it is to be really an inquiry of any usefulness, I submit some room should be left to the discretion of the person who presides over that inquiry.

“ Similarly, with regard to the question of a pleader. I am afraid I have got somewhere a similar amendment; it may be a long way off. But the question really is, whether these safeguards are to be of any use to the person concerned or not. That is the main question which this Council has to decide. If you are not going to allow the accused person to take advantage in any substantial form of the safeguards, then by all means do not allow a pleader, let the investigation be in camera, and you can do what you like.”

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :— 4-1 P.M.
“ My Lord, I am exceedingly sorry I was not in the Council Chamber when my amendment No. 103 was reached, but as the amendment No. 105 which stands in the name of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel is in effect the same as mine, with Your Excellency's permission I wish to say a few words in regard to my amendment. My amendment reads thus :—

‘ That in clause 25 (2) after the word ‘ inquiry ’ the following words be inserted :—

‘ which may, in its discretion, be in whole or in part ’.

“ My Lord, the object which I have in view in placing this amendment before the Council is to remove an avoidable and unnecessary suspicion as well as criticism against this Bill. I recognise that there may be cases in which it may be necessary to hold the inquiry in camera. But there may also be cases in which it will not be necessary for the investigating authority to hold the inquiry in secret in the manner contemplated. Therefore, it does not appear to me to be necessary that the Statute should lay down in imperative terms that every inquiry shall be held in camera. I think, if I may venture to suggest, it is advisable that discretion should be left to the investigating authority to hold the inquiry in camera if the circumstances and the necessities of the case so require. And that it should be left open to the authority to hold the inquiry in open court if the case is of an ordinary kind in which an inquiry in camera is not necessary."

4-5 P.M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—" My Lord, with regard to the question of the inquiry being held in camera, I wish to submit that either you have confidence in the investigating authority you yourself appoint or you have not. If you have confidence in the investigating authority you appoint you may depend upon it that if it considers that it is in the public interest necessary that an inquiry should held in camera it will do so. Even at the present moment judges who are not under that statutory obligation can exercise that right whenever they think that any part of an inquiry requires to be conducted in camera. My Lord, it is of the very essence of inquiries that there should be publicity about them. But it may be urged that this is not a judicial inquiry. Well I recognise that it is not a judicial inquiry, I deplore that it is not a judicial inquiry, and that makes it all the more imperative that you should have nothing like a provision for secrecy in the Statute. You, in the first instance, dispense with the ordinary judicial form and then you make the law worse by practically directing the investigating authority that every part of the inquiry should be held in camera. My Lord, I should like some Members to imagine their position if they were called before a judge, howsoever patient and howsoever fair he might be, if they knew that in that room there would be no one else excepting themselves and the judge. I know, my Lord, from daily experience that even the most innocent men feel very nervous when they suddenly find themselves face to face with a judge. I can quite imagine, my Lord, a man finding himself in that position absolutely getting nervous, and many things may happen there, my Lord, for which publicity is the only cure. I think the amendments of my friends Mr. Patel and Mr. Shafi are so reasonable that there should be no objection to accepting them, more particularly when they ask that discretion should be given to the investigating authority to decide for itself whether the inquiry should be held in camera or not."

4-5 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I have a similar amendment, namely No. 119 :—

'An enquiry under this section may, at the discretion of the investigating authority be held in whole or in part in camera, and the provisions of section 11 shall so far as may be, be applicable to such proceedings.'

Section 11 reads thus :—

'The Court, if it is of opinion that such a course is necessary in the public interest or for the protection of a witness, may prohibit or restrict in such way as it may direct the publication or disclosure of its proceedings or any part of its proceedings.'

"I submit that the provisions of section 11, together with the suggestion I have made, would amply meet the requirements, and I do not think it is necessary to enlarge upon the point."

4-0 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—" My Lord, I have so much respect for the opinions of my Hon'ble friend Dr. Sapru that I am unable to let an opinion which he has just expressed go by unanswered. He said it is much worse for a person to appear privately before an inquiring authority than to appear before him in open court. I can only say that my whole experience in the practice of my profession is exactly the contrary. The usual practice is for judges to retire to their chambers to see persons who it is supposed would be nervous before them in court. It is for that reason that the practice is for the judge to have children brought to him in chambers when there is a case affecting children, lunatics brought to him when there question affecting the lunacy of a person, ladies brought when there is a question which it is not desired to discuss in the court. It is a very well known principle. It is much easier for nervous people to sit down in the private room of a judge and talk quietly to him than in an open court."

[14TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir George Lowndes ; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru ;
• Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"But not persons accused of heinous offences."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord the amendment 4-10 P.M. with which I have to deal is whether the investigating authority should have power to decide whether the inquiry is to be held in camera or not. I can assure Hon'ble Members that I should be very glad to meet them on this matter if I thought it was possible to do so. I want them to consider what the position of Government is. If I cite again a quotation from Messrs. Beachcroft and Chandravarkar's report I may be held up to criticism because I have failed to cite a more recent opinion of Sir Narayan. I may say, however, that I quote his views on facts, not on policy. But taking the Rowlatt Report again you find the same arguments used there. I will read the following:—

'It is common knowledge that many assassinations, murders and bomb-throwing outrages have taken place and are still taking place, and that the victims have generally been persons assisting in Crown prosecutions; for instance inquiring officers and approvers.'

"That is a citation I think from a judgment.

"Then I may cite the case of a man called Murari Mohun Mitter whose son was an important witness in a case and who himself gave assistance to the police, and was very shortly afterwards murdered. I think I have told the Council on previous occasions also that much of the information given by these men is, by reason of the terror in which they are, given on the solemn undertaking that it shall not be made public. I admit of course that information given on that condition has not the same value as information which can be made public, but it is really the only way in which information of these revolutionary crimes can be obtained in the face of the circumstances to which I have alluded more than once before. Messrs. Chandravarkar and Beachcroft their inquiry say in regard to procedure:—

'In these circumstances it is impossible to secure a fair trial by the procedure of the Evidence Act and Criminal Procedure Code which is appropriate only to normal conditions.

The procedure to deal with revolutionary crime has to be practical in the sense of being appropriate to its special conditions so as to secure as fair a trial as is feasible under the exceptional situation. Our special procedure cannot therefore be regarded as violating the primary principle on which those laws are based'.

"The Government, having undertaken not to divulge many of these statements, it is obvious that the course which is now proposed would make it necessary for Government either not to produce the whole of its evidence before the tribunal or, in the alternative, commit a breach of faith.

"I want also the Council to remember this. I hope perhaps later on to accept an amendment as to the constitution of the investigating authority so as to place that body in a position entirely apart from the Government. It will have nothing whatever to do with the administration. A body like that cannot possibly know what the dangers of the situation are, what forces are at work under the surface, or the undertakings on which information has been given, and I submit that the modification, if I were to accept it in this form, might prevent the Government putting before a tribunal the whole of the information at its disposal, because we could not run the risk of that information being published. If therefore the investigating authority is to have the full information of Government before them, then the proceedings must be in camera.

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

"If the proceedings are not so held we are at once faced with the question of an open trial, which we really know to be hopeless."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"The second part remains unanswered."

His Excellency the President:—"I think Mr. Chanda you fathered Mr. Patel's amendment."

4-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I accepted his amendment in regard to the first part of my amendment."

"My Lord, I respectfully submit that the reply which the Hon'ble the Home Member has given is not complete. Now I say, why do you not repose trust in the investigating authority? The Hon'ble the Home Member has said there are matters which ought not to be divulged. Well, if that is so, and you state the case to the investigating authority, why do you assume that it would not exercise a proper discretion and withhold from the public such matters as ought not to be divulged. Why fetter the discretion of the investigating authority? That is my submission."

"With regard to the statements in the report of Sir Narayan Chandravarkar and Mr. Justice Beachcroft, I ask what about the converse proposition? What about the case of an informer who does not come before the investigating authority, who is not cross-examined, who is not placed on oath? How is the statement which he makes to be sifted? The Hon'ble the Home Member says that non-officials will be associated with the inquiry. How would that help the matter? How can anybody, official or non-official, find out by merely reading the statement of a man who is not before him, who is not cross-examined, who does not take an oath, whether he is speaking the truth or a falsehood?"

"Then I find the Hon'ble the Home Member has not said anything about the second part of my amendment regarding representation by a lawyer. Well, I will assume that silence amounts to consent, my Lord."

His Excellency the President:—"The question is that in clause 25 (2) for the words 'in camera' the following words be substituted 'which may be in camera if such authority for reasons to be recorded in writing so decides,' and the words 'at some stage of its proceedings' be deleted and the words 'personally or by pleader' be inserted after the words 'before it.'"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Will your Excellency put these two parts separately?"

His Excellency the President:—"I am putting Mr. Chanda's amendment. Mr. Chanda has accepted your part and I put it on to him."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My amendment is in three parts, may each part be put separately?"

His Excellency the President:—"I cannot make three out of it. I will put the whole of yours first."

The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda's amendment,* was put and negatived.

His Excellency the President:—"I will put yours separately Mr. Patel. I hope that satisfies you."

[14TH MARCH, 1919,] [*The President ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ;

The amendment was therefore negatived.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“I think your 4-26 P.M. Lordship may get No. 119 also negatived :—

‘That at the end of clause 25 (2) the following be inserted :—

‘An inquiry under this section may, at the discretion of the investigating authority be held in whole or in part in camera and the provisions of section 11 shall, so far as may be, be applicable to such proceedings.’

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—My Lord, I withdraw my amendment.

“That in clause 25 (2) the words ‘in camera’ be deleted, for the word ‘some’ the word ‘all’ be substituted, and after the words ‘in question’ the words ‘and his legal adviser’ be inserted.

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

* That in clause 25(2) for the words ‘in camera’ the following words be substituted :—
‘which may be in camera if such authority for reasons to be recorded in writing so decides.’

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir George Lowndes; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi; The President.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause 25(2) the words 'in camera' be deleted and after the words 'against him' the words 'and the nature of the evidence in so far as it may be disclosed' be inserted, and after the words 'have to offer' the words 'the evidence he may tender' be inserted.

The clause would read thus:—

'Such authority shall in every case allow the person in question a reasonable opportunity of appearing before it at some stage in its proceedings and shall, if he so appears, explain to him the nature of the charge made against him and the nature of the evidence in so far as it may be disclosed and shall hear any explanation he may have to offer and the evidence he may tender, and shall make such further investigation (if any) as appears to such authority to be relevant and reasonable.'

"What I ask is that the investigating authority shall tell the accused person not merely the nature of the charge against him, but also the nature of the evidence against him, in so far as it may be disclosed without peril to the State

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"The Hon'ble Member never said that."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I said it. The object is this. It is no use your simply telling him he spoke particular words in a particular place—that that is the charge. There must be also some sort of disclosure of the nature of the evidence, namely, he was seen and heard saying so, by such and such a person at such and such a place; so that he may have the opportunity of adducing evidence to show that he was or was not there. Not merely the nature of the charge, but the nature of the evidence should be disclosed to the accused person. It would be only fair that this should be done.

"And then I say that any explanation he may have to offer should be taken and also the evidence he may tender. It may be said that that may lengthen the trial unnecessarily. My answer is that even under the Criminal Procedure Code witnesses may be dispensed with if the object be considered by the authority to be merely for the purpose of securing delay or defeating the ends of justice; and I submit that in an inquiry of this sort the discretion would be more rigorously exercised against the accused person, and consequently there would be no harm whatsoever in providing that at the discretion of the authority the evidence tendered by the accused should be taken. If after taking such evidence, any further investigation appears to be necessary, the investigating authority may hold it. I therefore submit that the amendments that I seek to have the Council adopt are of an extremely reasonable character, and I hope the Government will be able to accept them."

4-28 P.M.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"My Lord, it will be seen that my Hon'ble friend's amendment consists really of two parts. In the second part of his amendment he proposes that the words 'the evidence he may tender' be inserted after the words 'have to offer'. Now, with regard to this part of his amendment, your Lordship will notice that there are other amendments—nos. 109 to 112—which cover the same point. So if your Lordship will accept my suggestion that the two parts shall be put separately, then the Hon'ble Members who have proposed amendments nos. 109, 110, 111 and 112, may now address the Council on their own amendments and the proceedings will be considerably abridged."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"I have an amendment also, my Lord:

'That in sub-clause (2) of clause 25, after the word 'offer' the words 'and take any evidence he may have to adduce in his defence' be inserted.'

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Khan Bahadur Mian Mahammad Shafi; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"I should like to add only a few words to what has fallen from the lips of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma. Your Lordship has seen that in clause 25, sub-clause (2) the following procedure is laid down :

'The investigating authority shall then hold an inquiry in camera for the purpose of ascertaining what, in its opinion, having regard to the facts and circumstances adduced by the Government, appears against the person in respect of whom the order has been made.' Such authority' this is the relevant portion.—

'Such authority shall in every case allow the person in question a reasonable opportunity of appearing before it at some stage in its proceedings and shall, if he so appears, explain to him the nature of the charge made against him and shall hear any explanation he may have to offer, and shall make such further investigation (if any) as appears to such authority to be relevant and reasonable.'

That is to say, the sub-clause as it now stands, provides that the authority shall explain the charge to the person concerned and shall take down whatever explanation he has to offer and make any further investigation that the authority itself may think necessary. This does not give any right to the person concerned to produce evidence in his defence. Now as the investigating authority has all the materials which may be in the possession of the Government before it, that is to say, has read all the evidence which the Government have placed before the investigating authority, if the clause were to remain as it now stands it would result in this, that the inquiry would be practically ex parte, unless the investigating authority in its discretion think fit to direct further inquiry after the person concerned has made his explanation. That is not fair play. I submit that the person who is called upon to give an explanation ought to have an opportunity of adducing in his own defence such evidence as he may wish to produce. As has been pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, the Criminal Procedure Code already includes ample power, gives ample power, to the authority to exclude such evidence as they think is intended merely to waste their time and is not necessary to the case. It seems to me that in fairness to the person who is called upon to plead to the charge which has been brought against him he ought to be given an opportunity of adducing evidence."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Please your Excellency, on this 4-48 p.m. question I have got two amendments : one is no. 110 and the other is no. 112. p. 110 reads thus :—

'That in clause 25 (2) after the words 'he may have to offer' the words 'examine any witnesses he may produce' be inserted.'

My amendment no. 112 is—

'That in clause 25 (2) after the words 'relevant and reasonable' the following proviso be inserted :—

"Provided that the investigating authority shall, if the person in question applies to him for process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or thing, issue such process, unless for reasons to be recorded he deems it unnecessary to do so and for this purpose, such authority shall have all the powers conferred by the Code on a Court."

"The point, my Lord, is this. You can imagine cases in which it will not be possible for the person concerned to produce his witnesses, because under clause 21 he will be at the time when the investigation takes place, under some order of externment or internment, and therefore it will not be possible for him to go to his place or the place where the witnesses are and produce them before the investigating authority. If he produces them, it is all right. There are many cases in which he can so produce them, because it is not always that the Local Government may pass orders of externment or internment. They may be satisfied—although there is very little hope of this—by asking the man to execute a bond. But if there are other orders passed, it will not be possible for him to produce witnesses; and therefore I say that power should be given to the investigating authority to summon his witnesses if he applies for summonses.

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Sir William Vincent ; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

“ My Hon'ble friend, the Home Member remarked in discussing some amendment of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Chanda, in regard to these witnesses that they would be threatened and this, that and the other. But this does not apply for the defence witnesses ; it applies to the prosecution witnesses. Here we are concerned with the accused ; and if evidence is offered he should be given an opportunity of calling the witnesses ; and if those witnesses cannot be produced, the courts should be empowered to summon those witnesses and examine them. As the section stands at present the investigating authority has no power whatever to summon any witness ”.

His Excellency the President :—“ Mr. Chanda, you have got an amendment on this ? ”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—“ Yes, I beg to move—

‘ That in clause 25(3) after the words ‘ have to offer ’ the words ‘ and shall summon such witnesses as he desires to call and examine them ’ be inserted. I have nothing more to add. ’ ”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—“ Your Lordship will be pleased to put these two separately ; the first part relates to the nature of the evidence to be disclosed, and the second part relates to the taking of evidence. I would like the first part to be put first. ”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ My Lord, may I explain . . . ? ”

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ The Hon'ble the Home Member wants to accept some amendment. ”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ Mr. Patel with his usual ingenuity has hit the nail on the head. I am prepared to accept amendment no. 112 of the Hon'ble Member himself with some small changes in the form which the drafting department may recommend. ”

His Excellency the President :—“ Will you tell me how much of Mr. Sarma's amendment that disposes of ? ”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ I object to the use of the word ‘ witness ’ because the investigating authority, as has been pointed out, is not a Court of justice or a judicial body ; and it seems to me that that word is inappropriate ; but Sir George Lowndes has modified the amendment in a way that will, I hope, meet Mr. Sarma. ”

The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's motion was put and negatived.

His Excellency the President :—“ Are you satisfied, Mr. Shafi ? ”

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi :—“ Yes, my Lord. ”

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ I do not want to press my amendment 112. ”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—“ I do not want to press my amendment 109. ”

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir James DuBoulay; Sir George Lowndes; The President; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"This, your Excellency, is a very simple amendment: I beg to move—

'That in clause 25 (2) for the words 'a reasonable opportunity of appearing before it at some stage,' the words 'to appear before it at every stage' be substituted.'

"I want that this investigation should take place in the presence of the person concerned and not behind his back. That is all I want."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay:—"Government cannot accept that. The same difficulty occurs as has been referred to before so often. The names of people who give information and of witnesses who come there to . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Your Excellency, it is difficult to hear."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay:—"There must be times in the course of an inquiry when statements are being read by the investigating authorities or persons are being examined before them. It is essential for the protection of the persons who make these statements that their identity should not be given away: and at such times it is therefore impossible to allow the person concerned to be present."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, I suggest that Mr. Patel's amendment no. 112 might be put as it stands, on the understanding that we are to eliminate the word 'witness' and substitute some expression afterwards which will not suggest a judicial proceeding. I understood, my Lord, that your Excellency stated that there would be an adjournment."

His Excellency the President:—"There will be an adjournment for tea at 5 o'clock."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"That there will be an adjournment to enable us to put all these amendments into shape. If this amendment is accepted, it is understood that we shall redraft it on the lines I have referred to . . .

His Excellency the President:—"There will be an interval somewhere between to-morrow morning and the next time we sit on this Bill during which the Legislative Department will be able to put these things into shape. I will put Mr. Patel's amendment (no. 112) as it stands on that understanding."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move that the two provisos to clause 25 (2) be deleted. The provisos are:—

'Provided that the investigating authority shall not disclose to the person whose case is before it any fact the communication of which might endanger the public safety or the safety of any individual:

Provided further that nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to entitle the person in question to appear or to be represented before the investigating authority by pleader, nor shall the Local Government be so entitled.'

"My Lord, I move that these two provisos be deleted."

[Sir William Vincent ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Sir James DuBoulay ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ; The President ; Mr. V. J. Patel] [14TH MARCH, 1919]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I have just read the first proviso to this clause and all it enacts is that the investigating authority shall not disclose to the person whose case is before it any fact the communication of which might endanger the public safety or the safety of any individual. I cannot think that the Hon'ble Member seriously contemplates that the investigating authority should disclose matters which are prejudicial to the public interest or which would really mean the murder of an unfortunate witness. I cannot believe that he really wants that."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I also move, my Lord, that the second proviso to clause 25(2) be deleted. I have not heard distinctly what the attitude of Government is with regard to the appointment of a pleader."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay:—"I am afraid that the attitude of Government is against Mr. Sarma."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I think these two nos. 115 and 118 go out automatically since no. 104 was rejected."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"My Lord, I beg to move"

His Excellency the President:—"No, no ; you had your opportunity on amendment no. 104 ; this question was discussed then ; we are only seeing what progress we have made. The question is that the two provisos to clause 25(2) be deleted."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment which runs as follows:—

'That in the first proviso to clause 25 (2) for the words 'shall not disclose' the words 'may not for the reasons to be recorded in writing disclose' be substituted.'

The proviso will then read as follows:—

'Provided that the investigating authority may not for the reasons to be recorded in writing disclose to the person whose case is before it any fact the communication of which might endanger the public safety or the safety of any individual.'

This will meet, I believe, the criticisms of the Hon'ble the Home Member in regard to Mr. Chanda's amendment which the Council has just rejected. I propose that the investigating authority refuse to disclose to the person concerned any fact which, in its opinion, is likely to endanger the safety of the public or any individual but in doing so, the authority must record its reasons in writing."

The Hon'ble Sir William H. Vincent:—"My Lord, I submit there really is no reason to modify the wording of this clause. I have discussed the clause so frequently that I am ashamed of doing so again. It provides that the investigating authority shall not disclose to the person whose case is before it any fact which would endanger the public safety or the safety of any individual, and no benefit would be gained by making the suggested change in the wording. I think it is reasonable that the investigating authority should be under a distinct obligation not to communicate information of this kind to the person whose case is under investigation in the circumstances contemplated."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"It is for the Local Government who has to decide the facts to say whether there are any reasons why they refused to disclose certain facts which would be material to the defence of the accused. That is the main reason why I want the investigating authority to record the reasons for its order refusing to disclose any fact."

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; The President; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. C. A. Kincaid.]

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move my amendment which runs as follows—

'That in the second proviso to clause 25 (2) for the word 'entitle' the word 'debar' and for the word 'entitled' the word 'debarred' be substituted.'

I think it would be a great advantage if both parties were allowed to appear by pleader."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, the amendment which I wish to move reads thus—

'That in clause 25(3) the word 'not' be deleted.'

"We all heard yesterday what the Hon'ble the Law Member said, that the Evidence Act and the rules of evidence were instruments of discovering the truth, and anybody who neglects the laws of evidence and the rules of evidence really shuts his eyes to truth or debars himself from discovering it. If that is so, my Lord, I do not understand why the investigating authority should not be content with the law of evidence. Don't they want to know the truth? I believe they do. The appointment requires that they should go into the matter and find out the truth. So I propose that the word 'not' be deleted, and then the sub-section will run as follows: 'subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) the inquiry shall be conducted in such manner as the investigating authority considers best suited to elicit the facts of the case; and in making the inquiry such authority shall be bound to observe the rules of the law of evidence,' and that is the reason why I have suggested this amendment."

His Excellency the President:—"You have got a similar amendment, Mr. Chanda?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I have nothing more to add to what the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde has said, my Lord."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid:—"I have got to address the Council on this point, my Lord."

His Excellency the President:—"But we are not discussing Mr. Sastri's amendment now."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I am afraid I am not in a position to go up to the standard of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde. My amendment is a moderate one. I will first read it according to the rules. I beg to move that—'in clause 25(3) for the words 'shall not be bound to observe' the words 'shall, as far as possible' be substituted.

The clause will read thus:—

'Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) the inquiry shall be conducted in such manner as the investigating authority considers best suited to elicit the facts of the case and in making the inquiry such authority shall, as far as possible, follow the rules of the law of evidence.'

"Now, if Hon'ble Members will turn their attention to the amendment that follows and which stands in the name of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sastri, it also requires what I require, that in clause 25(3) for the words 'shall not' the words 'shall as far as possible' be substituted. We do not by these amendments, your Excellency, ask that the investigating authority shall under all circumstances be bound to follow the rules of evidence as if it were a court of law ; but we say that it should be guided as far as possible by the rules of evidence. It should not be left entirely free to discard the rules of evidence altogether. That is our point, and I trust the Hon'ble the Home Member will at any rate consider this suggestion of ours."

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President ; Mr. Srinivasa Sastri ; Mr. C. A. Kincaid.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President :—" Mr. Sastri, have you anything to say ? "

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri :—" I have nothing to add, my Lord. "

4-55 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid :—" My Lord, one is so accustomed to regard the laws of evidence with slavish admiration that it is with almost a feeling of dismay that one hears it said that the rules are generally based on common sense but are also sometimes divorced from common sense, that they sometimes have their origin in true principles and in other times have their origin in historical incidents that belong to so remote a past as to be now forgotten ; that they are not immutable laws which never vary but that they change in different countries and in the same countries at different times. Yet this is the proposition which I wish to prove by one or two illustrations. Yesterday, my Lord, I referred to the case of parties giving evidence on their own behalf in civil and criminal cases. The old objection to this practice was based on a fear of the sin of perjury. This no doubt is a sound principle of religion, but it has nothing to do with the principles of evidence. I shall not, however, labour this point as I went into it yesterday at considerable length. My next illustration is a case where an accused person makes a confession to a policeman. In England such a confession is admissible. There was a time in India when such a confession was admissible also. Now it is inadmissible. The reason why it is inadmissible was that it was found that confessions were so often extorted by police torture, that the Legislature thought it advisable to make all confessions to a policeman, unless made in the presence of a Magistrate, inadmissible. Yet, my Lord, many of these excluded confessions are true and voluntary, and to admit a true and voluntary confession is a sound principle of evidence. Thus the Evidence Act as it stands violates instead of observes in this particular the true principles of evidence. I shall prove this by a simple example taken from the ordinary affairs of life. Supposing any one of us had a watch stolen and complained to the police. Suppose that after a police inquiry the police man brought up a servant and the servant in the owner's presence and in the policeman's presence admitted the theft of the watch. Would the owner say, ' No, this cannot be true, because this confession is made in the presence of a policeman and in the absence of a Magistrate. ' Surely not. He would say to the servant ' you, stole my watch, did you, scoundrel ? ' where is it ? ' Thus showing that in spite of the Evidence Act, he fully accepted the confession of the servant.

" I next come to the case of an accomplice's evidence. This is very remarkable, because under section 133 of the Evidence Act a conviction can be based upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice. Nevertheless, High Court after High Court has disregarded this section and has preferred to follow illustration B of section 114. This lays down that the Court may presume the evidence of an accomplice as unworthy of credit unless supported in material particulars. I do not wish in any way to quarrel with the Judges of the High Court over this, but I would say with all respect and deference that they are really following an old tradition of English law which has little or nothing to do with the principles of evidence. I have heard it said, and I believe correctly, although I cannot speak positively as I have made no independent research, that this practice of rejecting the unsupported testimony of an accomplice is based upon the old treason trials of England. A man convicted of treason was sentenced to be hanged, drawn and quartered, an extremely lingering and painful death. The result was that Judges, except in times of great political excitement used to do their utmost to get the accused off. They first ruled that no man should be convicted of treason except upon the testimony of two eye-witnesses. As these two eye-witnesses were generally accomplices, the Judges next ruled that the unsupported testimony of an accomplice was unworthy of credit unless supported in material particulars. They thus attained their object by getting off a large number of accused persons. From treason trials the practice spread to other trials, and thus we have now as part of law of the land this practice which is based not upon the true principles of evidence, but on the cruelty of the ancient English law. To make my meaning clear, I give another instance drawn from the affairs of daily life. Supposing one Smith came up to any one of us and said 'Brown and I have killed your son.' Would the father then say to himself, 'Smith no doubt killed my son but not Brown,' for the only thing against Brown is the unsupported testimony of Smith. Surely not. The first thing the father would do would be to go off to the nearest police-station and charge both Smith and Brown with murder.

[Mr. C. A. Kinnaird.]

"My next illustration is the case of hearsay evidence. Here at least it may be thought that we are on solid rock and that whatever else is right or wrong, every statement made in a court must be first-hand testimony. To revert once more to the Pickwick trial, when Mr. Samuel Weller was giving his evidence he let fall the remark 'out with it, as the policeman said to the little boy when he had swallowed a farthing.' Instantly Mr. Justice Stareleigh woke up and said, 'you must not tell us what the policeman said or anybody else said, because that would not be evidence.' My Lord, it might well be thought that a rule of evidence, the breach of which would rouse even Mr. Justice Stareleigh from his slumbers must contain a truth so tremendous that it would be accepted by the whole civilized world. It may, therefore, come by a slight surprise to many members of this Council to hear that neither France, Spain, Italy nor Belgium exclude by their laws hearsay evidence in trials. But it may be said 'Oh, these are no doubt civilized nations. Italy is the mother of arts and music. France is the home of pure reasoning and scientific thought, but for the true principles of jurisprudence we must go to Britain.' Well, my Lord, I would ask the members of this Council to come with me to Britain and search there the true principles of jurisprudence. The Island of Great Britain includes two kingdoms, and I have often heard it said by gentlemen born in the north of the Tweed that the true secret of England's greatness is her good fortune in being allied to her sister kingdom which is far the greater and far more splendid historically of the two. My Lord, it is not for me, a mere Irishman, to decide between the conflicting claims of these two great and famous monarchies. But I think, I can say, without fear of contradiction that the Scotch Courts hold as high a reputation as any courts in Europe, and that the intellects of the Judges who preside over them and of the advocates who practise in them are as clear and as penetrating as any judges or any advocates anywhere else. It will, therefore, be a surprise to some members of this Council to learn that in Scottish courts hearsay evidence is not excluded. Now what is the reason? The reason, my Lord, has nothing whatever to do with the true principles of evidence. The jury system of England goes so far back that there was a time when juries were so ignorant and so uneducated that judges despaired of making them understand the difference in the value of first-hand and second-hand evidence. They therefore cut the gordian knot by excluding second-hand evidence altogether. This was no doubt convenient, but it was not in consonant with true principles. I will again support my argument by an instance drawn from the common affairs of life. Supposing the son of any one of us was bathing and Smith came up to one of us and said 'Brown tells me that your son has been drowned.' Would not we be stricken with grief; would not we rush off to the seashore in the hope either of saving our son or at any rate recovering his body? And yet, my Lord, in a court of justice Smith's evidence on the subject would be absolutely excluded unless and until Brown went into the witness-box and related what he had himself seen

[The President ; Mr. C. A. Kincaid ; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President :—“ I am very loth to stop you, Mr. Kincaid. We all know it is a very interesting subject. But will you now come to the amendment ? ”

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid :—“ My Lord, I thought I was speaking to the amendment. ”

His Excellency the President :—“ I know it is a most interesting subject. It is now 5 o'clock. Will you come to the amendment ? ”

The Hon'ble Mr. C. A. Kincaid :—“ Very well, my Lord, if that is your Lordship's view I shall bring my speech to a close, as quickly as possible.

“ I do not want to decry the rules of the law of evidence at all. They have proved excellent in practice, and in the ordinary law Courts I would not change them for the world. All I want to impress on the Council is that they are merely one method, and often a rough and ready method of finding out the truth. They have nothing holy or sacred in them. They do not claim a divine origin like the Bible, the Koran or the Vedas to quote my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma. But it may be said that it is true that the rules of the law of evidence have their faults, but still they have been universally adopted in tribunals and it is a sound judicial rule stare decisis. There is no doubt something in that, and if every tribunal had adopted the rules of evidence, I would admit there was a very great deal in it. . But under section 1 of the Evidence Act the rules of the law of evidence do not apply to arbitration tribunals. Now, my Lord, the men who preside over arbitration courts are not lawyers, they are not men trained in sifting evidence, they are just ordinary laymen. Yet the law pays such respect to their decisions that it will not allow the courts to interfere with them ; it will not allow the parties any right of appeal. I think from this it is clear that the Legislature admits that there are other ways of arriving at the truth than by a slavish adherence to the rules of the law of evidence. ”

5-4 P.M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—“ My Lord, it is somewhat an irony of fate

His Excellency the President :—“ Will you be long, Dr. Sapru ? ”

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru :—“ No, my Lord, I will take only 5 or 6 minutes.

“ It is somewhat an irony of fate that we, Indian lawyers, should feel proud of British jurisprudence, while true born Englishmen should have to find fault with their own. When I heard Mr. Kincaid finding fault with English jurisprudence and referring to French jurisprudence, Italian jurisprudence and Russian jurisprudence,—probably he did not refer to Russian jurisprudence, I was wondering whether Mr. Kincaid would not after his retirement go to Parliament and play the role of Bentham and ask English Judges and juries to revise and to throw away all their inherited rules of evidence and accept his own ideal of the law of evidence. I am old fashioned enough to think that the rules of evidence which have been framed by English lawyers are based on accumulated human experience, and that if there is occasion for the observance of those rules in ordinary cases in India, there is the still greater occasion for the use of these rules in cases of this character where frankly and avowedly you are not adopting judicial form.

“ My Lord, I will content myself by reading to your Lordship a passage from a book which probably represents more or less either the ideas or the wishes of the Hon'ble Mr. Kincaid on this matter. A learned legal writer (Mr. Carter) says :—

‘ A method of trial, where witnesses in our sense are rarely if ever called, may do its work well enough in a small community where everybody knows what everybody else is doing ; but these primitive conditions did not last for ever, and when they changed, the position of an accused person must have been, according to modern notions, extremely harsh and difficult. He was not permitted to call witnesses. Queen Mary is said to have directed the judges to

14TH MARCH, 1919.] [Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

How prisoners to call witnesses in felony ; but this was regarded as an indulgence, the ruling being that witnesses were not to be heard against the Crown, even in felony, and if such witnesses were called, they were not sworn. Before the great civil war the following were the features in which a criminal trial differed from a criminal trial of to-day :—

- (1) The prisoner was confined more or less secretly and could not prepare his defence. He was examined and his examination taken down and used against him.
- (2) He had no notice of the evidence which was going to be produced against him.
- (3) He had no counsel either before or at trial.
- (4) There were no rules of evidence as we understand them. The witnesses were not necessarily confronted with the prisoner, nor were originals of documents produced, the confessions of accomplices were not only admitted, but were regarded as specially cogent.
- (5) The prisoner was not allowed to call witnesses on his own behalf ; had he been permitted, he could not have done so with effect, for he could not find out what evidence they would give, or procure their attendance. In later times they were not examined on oath even if they were called.

After the Civil War some improvements were made. In 1895 persons indicted for high treason or misprison of treason were to have a copy of the indictment five days before trial and to have counsel and witnesses upon oath.

"If all the arguments of Mr. Kincaid are to prevail, we must be prepared in the year 1919 to go back to the times before the great Civil War."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"Your Excellency, in this discussion one is likely to lose sight of the main amendment that is for the consideration of the Council, and it is that I do not want this Council to say that the investigating authority shall in all cases be bound to follow the rules of evidence ; all I want is that they shall pay attention to the rules of evidence."

5-7 P.M.

The motion was put and the Council divided as follows :—

[The Council adjourned till 5-40 P.M.]

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir William Vincent; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

5-40 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"The amendment which I wish to move, your Excellency, reads as follows:—

'That in clause 25(5) for the words 'may if it thinks fit' the word 'shall' be substituted.'

Clause 25(5) at present runs:—

'On the completion of the inquiry, the investigating authority shall report in writing to the Local Government the conclusions at which it has arrived, and may, if it thinks fit, adduce reasons in support thereof.'

"For the words 'may, if it thinks fit', I would propose to substitute the word 'shall.'

"This, I take it, will not do any injury to any one, because this report will be intended for the Local Government and the Local Government would like, I believe, to have all such reasons as the investigating authority may think fit to put down. So I wish to substitute the word 'shall' for the words 'may, if it thinks fit'."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I am prepared to accept this amendment on behalf of the Government."

The motion was put and agreed to.

5-42 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"May it please your Excellency, I beg to move that to clause 25 (5) the following be added:—

'In such conclusions the investigating authority shall state clearly whether or not, in its opinion, the person is or has been actively concerned in any anarchical or revolutionary movement as alleged by the Local Government.'

"On a reference to clause 21 read with clause 25 your Excellency will find that the Local Government has to make an order against the person on the ground that the man is concerned with any movement referred to in section 20. The investigating authority should, I submit, on that information clearly find whether the person concerned is or is not concerned in the movement referred to in section 20 as alleged by the Local Government. I do not for a moment suggest that the Local Government is bound to accept that finding. All that I want is that the investigating authority should be required to state clearly its finding as to this particular allegation."

5-44 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, we believe the object which the Hon'ble Member has in view is already met by the words of the clause as drafted, but if it will satisfy his wishes I am quite prepared to accept the amendment in the following modified form. Perhaps the Hon'ble Member will compare it.

'That to sub-clause 5 of clause 25 the following be added:—

'In reporting such conclusions the investigating authority shall state whether or not, in its opinion, the person in question is, or has been, actively concerned in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20.'

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, this is all right; it meets the requirements of my amendment."

The amendment in the modified form was put and agreed to.

5-46 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I think, My Lord, this disposes of my amendment* No. 126."

* That to clause 25(5) the following provision be added:—

'Provided that the investigating authority shall first record its finding as to whether it is satisfied that the person in question is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20, and in case it is not so satisfied the person shall be at once discharged.'

[The President; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir James DuBoulay; Sir William Vincent.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President:—"You do not wish to press your amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"No, my Lord."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"In view of the acceptance by Government of amendment No. 112, I beg to withdraw my next amendment.*"

The amendments were by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause 25(6) for the word 'may' the word 'shall' be substituted.'

His Excellency the President:—"The word 'may' occurs three times in that sub-clause. Which one do you mean?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I mean the 'may' in the last line 'and on such a recommendation, the Local Government may extend the duration of the order accordingly'.

"I would propose that instead of the 'may' there the word 'shall' be substituted."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay:—"There is some difficulty in understanding which of the various 'mays' Mr. Chanda refers to".

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble Member means the 'may' in the second last line."

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay:—"It seems to me that this would prevent the Local Government from letting a man go, though the investigating authority had not completed its inquiries or come to any conclusion, the Local Government had independently made up its mind that there were not sufficient grounds for taking action against the person concerned.

"We are therefore not prepared to accept this amendment."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 25 as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 26 as amended by the Select Committee stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move the following amendment:—

'That in clause 26(1) for the words 'may discharge' the words 'if the report shows that such authority is not satisfied that the person is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20 shall discharge' and for the words 'or may make' the words 'and in other cases may make' be substituted.'

"The sub-clause will then read like this:—

"On receipt of the report of the investigating authority, the Local Government, if the report shows that such authority is not satisfied that the person is or has been actively concerned in such area in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20, shall discharge the order made under section 21, and in other cases may make any order which is authorised by that section."

* That in clause 25(6) the word 'if' be deleted and for the words 'has not completed' the words 'shall complete' be substituted and the words 'from such authority' to the end of the sub-clause be deleted.

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I have attempted to explain to this Council more than once that the investigating authority is not a judicial body. The effect of the Hon'ble Member's amendment would be to make the decision or the opinion of the investigating authority a mandate to the Government. Well, that is exactly what is not contemplated. I can assure the Council that in 99 cases out of 100 the opinion of the investigating authority is accepted, and if Hon'ble Members have taken the trouble to withdraw from the table a copy of a statement which I laid thereon showing the action taken on reports by advisory committees recently, they will see that it entirely bears out what I say. But there are exceptional cases in which Government does not accept the views of the Committee. There may be and have been such cases, but apart from this the matter is really one of principle. The responsibility for releasing these men or keeping them under restriction is the Executive Government's."

5-49 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I do not quite appreciate the object of this arrangement. Why then have this authority at all? If the finding of the authority is to have no weight, you might as well not have this authority."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, I withdraw my amendment—

"That in clause 26 (I) for the word 'may' the word 'shall' be substituted and after the words 'section 21' the words 'if the investigating authority has so recommended' be inserted and for the word 'or' the words 'and in other cases' be substituted."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I withdraw my amendment—

"That in clause 26 (I) for the words from 'or may make' to the word 'section' the words 'and shall do so, if the investigating authority reports favourably to the persons accused' be substituted."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I withdraw my amendment—

"That in clause 26 (I) after the words 'is authorised by that section' the words 'and justified by the report' be inserted."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"I beg to move—

"That in proviso (a) to clause 26 (I) after the words 'that authority' the words 'and its reasons therefor' be inserted."

"This is a very small amendment. If the proviso remains as it is, the investigating authority might only give their conclusions but not the reasons for those conclusions, and I make it necessary that they should state the reasons for their conclusions, and that is all."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, the Hon'ble Member described his amendment as a small one, and I have heard him describe other amendments in the same words. The effect of it, however, will be to make it incumbent on the investigating authority to disclose to the person whose case is under investigation the whole of the information given against him. Well, I have been at some pains on various occasions this afternoon to explain to the Council what that means, and it only involves exposing persons who have given information to Government to the danger of immediate assassination. I am a little surprised that my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde should seek to place persons who have assisted Government in that dangerous position. I am afraid that I must oppose this amendment."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I beg to move:—

"That in clause 26 (2) for the words 'on which it was made' the words 'of the order made under section 21' be substituted."

"The clause would read thus—

"No order made under sub-section (1) shall continue in force for more than one year from the date of the order made under section 21."

"It is a matter of some importance because if the order is to be in force for one year from the date on which

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I interrupt—merely to save time—to inform the Hon'ble Member that I am prepared to accept the amendment?"

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I beg to move—

"That to clause 26 (2) the following be added:—

"The Local Government shall pass its order on the report within a week from the receipt thereof and the interim order shall remain in force till then."

"The first part was intended to curtail as far as possible the period during which an interim order should have been in force against the accused; but in view of the modification of clause 2, which was accepted by the Government, I do not press this part.

"But I submit the second part may well be accepted, because I think the recommendation of the investigating authority to extend the period of the order passed under section 21 would ordinarily be confined to the date on which they may make their recommendation. Supposing one month expires and the period provided for in clause (6) expires, it would take some time for the Government to pass their orders on the report. There is no provision as far as I can see—I speak subject to correction—there is no provision for the extension of the order. I therefore say that the interim order shall remain in force till then. But it is really immaterial whether the Government accept or not."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, the Government have no objection to this amendment, but I hope the Hon'ble Member sees the effect of his proposal: it will allow the Government to keep an order in force indefinitely, and I am not sure that this is what he intends."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I will not press the amendment, my Lord. It would have been necessary if my other amendment had not been accepted."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

"That in clause 26 (3) after the words 'again make' the words 'a reference to the investigating authority and the same procedure as laid down in the foregoing sub-clauses of this section shall mutatis mutandis be observed' be inserted and the rest of sub-clause be deleted."

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent; The President; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

“The clause would then read—

“On the expiry of an order made under sub-section (1), the Local Government may, if it is satisfied that such a course is necessary in the interests of the public safety, again make a reference to the investigating authority and the same procedure as is laid down in the foregoing sub-clauses of this section shall mutatis mutandis be observed.”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—“My Lord, I am afraid I am not prepared to accept this amendment as it stands, but I hope to be able to meet to a great extent what the Hon'ble Member seeks in connection with an amendment to be moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi later.”

His Excellency the President:—“Do you accept this arrangement, Mr. Chanda?”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—“Yes, my Lord.”
The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—“My Lord, I will await the result of the amendment to be moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi (No. 139) before moving mine.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“I will do the same, my Lord.”

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—
“My Lord, I beg to move—

“That in clause 26, sub-clause (4) be deleted and the following be inserted as a further proviso to sub-clause (3):—

“Provided, further, that before an order is made under this sub-section, a copy thereof shall be furnished to the person concerned, who may submit to the Local Government a representation in regard to such order. Any such representation shall be forwarded by the Local Government to the investigating authority for inquiry and report, and the investigating authority, after inquiry conducted in accordance with section 25, shall report thereon, and the Local Government shall consider the report of such authority.”

“As I understood the Hon'ble the Home Member to say that he was prepared to accept this amendment, I need not take up the time of the Council in discussing the reasons for which I move the amendment.”

5-55 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—“I am prepared to accept the amendment, but there is a small change in the wording and perhaps, as other Hon'ble Members are interested in this matter, I might read it out:—

“Provided that before an order is made under this sub-section, a copy of the order which it is proposed to make shall be furnished to the person concerned, who may submit to the Local Government a representation in regard to such order. Any such representation shall be forwarded by the Local Government to the investigating authority for enquiry and report, and the investigating authority, after inquiry conducted in accordance with section 25 shall report thereon, and the Local Government shall consider the report of such authority.”

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—
“I am satisfied”

The motion as amended was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—“My Lord, this
• To be moved if the amendment proposed in is the amendment • that to clause 26 (3) clause 26 (1) be not accepted. the following proviso be added:—

“Provided that when an order was passed under section 26 (1) which is not supported by the conclusion of the investigating authority under section 25, an order shall be passed under this clause only after reference to the investigating authority and on the strength of its conclusions.”

[14TH MARCH, 1919.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; The President; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir William Vincent.]

"It is also referred to in amendment No. 140 which runs as follows:—

'That to clause 26 (4) the following be added:—'and pass orders in accordance with its conclusions.'

"I do not wish to speak on these; I merely ask your Lordship to put them. I do not wish to withdraw them. I wish to put the last portion of amendment No. 138; that the Government are not going to allow the investigating authority's conclusions to be final. I do not want to say anything about that."

The motion was put and negatived.

His Excellency the President :—"May I inquire if Mr. Chanda and Mr. Khaparde wish to put their amendments Nos. 136* and 137†?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"No, my Lord."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"No, my Lord."

His Excellency the President :—"Amendment No. 140 automatically drops following the fate of No. 138. The question is that clause 26, as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that clause 27, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I wish to move a small amendment to this, my Lord, that in clause 27 after the words 'punishable with' the word 'simple' be inserted. I say, my Lord, that disobedience to an order under this Part should be punishable with simple imprisonment in accordance with section 188 of the Indian Penal Code which says: 'Whoever knowing that by an order promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, he is directed to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management disobeys such direction shall, if such disobedience causes or tends to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury, to any persons lawfully employed, be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month.' Of course, there is another clause of the same section which says 'and if such disobedience causes or tends to cause danger to human life, health or safety, or causes or tends to cause a riot or affray, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months or with fine"

6 P.M.

"My submission, my Lord, is that in accordance with the earlier part of the same section the sentence should be simple imprisonment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, the punishment under section 188, Indian Penal Code, where disobedience to the order promulgated causes or tends to cause danger to human health, life or safety or causes or is likely to cause a riot or affray, is imprisonment of either description for six months, and I submit that a person who disobeys an order under the law, which is directly connected with a movement against the public safety, certainly deserves no more consideration."

* That in clause 26 (5) after the words "again make" the words "a reference to the investigating authority and the same procedure as is laid down in the foregoing sub-clauses of this section shall mutatis mutandis be observed" be inserted and the rest of sub-clause be deleted.

† That in clause 26 (4) after the words "again make" the words "on a fresh reference to the investigating authority" be inserted.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; [14TH MARCH, 1919.]
Sir William Vincent ; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"But in some cases under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code the punishment is simple."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

"That in clause 27, for the word 'six months' the words 'three months' and for the words 'one thousand rupees' the words 'five hundred rupees' be substituted.

"I am sure my Hon'ble friend, the Home Member, is aware that there is some feeling on the subject, and I trust the Government will consider this favourably."

6-3 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I am willing to accept the Hon'ble Member's amendment in so far as it relates to the amount of fine, because as far as I know there have been no cases in which fines exceeding five hundred rupees have been imposed. If it would meet the Hon'ble Member in any way to have the amendment framed in the following words, I am quite prepared to accept it:—

"That in clause 27 for the words 'one thousand rupees' the words 'five hundred rupees' be substituted."

6-5 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, it is all right so far as it goes ; I have no objection, it may go in."

The amended motion was put and agreed to.

The motion that clause 27, as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 28 do stand part of the Bill."

6-6 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I move, my Lord, that in clause 28 after the words 'District Magistrate' the words 'or Sessions Judge' be inserted. This clause deals with the forfeiture of security bonds, and I submit that, inasmuch as the question is one of some importance power may be conferred upon Sessions Judges also, because after all the choice of the Sessions Judge lies with the Local Government. I only enlarge the scope and the sphere from which the choice should be made, and I hope the Government will be able to accept it."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I am afraid I must oppose this amendment. It is clearly not in accordance with ordinary practice. The enforcement of bonds is a matter for the District Magistrate rather than for the Sessions Judge. The bond here is imposed or taken on the motion of an executive authority and the enforcement and realisation of it should be entrusted to a Magistrate."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 28 stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

6-8 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 29, as amended by the Select Committee, do stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move that in clause 29 for the words 'Local Government' wherever these words occur in the said clause, the words 'Chief Justice' be substituted. To put in two words, the amendment means that the power to appoint the investigating authority should be vested in the Chief Justice and not in the Local Government. The reason is this, my Lord, that it is the Local Government who makes the first order, the interim order ; it is the Local Government who lays information before the investigating authority ; it is the Local Government under the clause as it stands who appoints the investigating authority ; it is the Local Government who has to receive the report of the investigating authority and it is the Local Government, finally, that is to decide the fate of the man. I therefore submit that so far as the investigating authority is concerned, it must feel that it is to some extent independent of the Local Government. For these reasons I move this amendment. I trust the Hon'ble Member will accept it."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I regret that I cannot think of accepting this amendment. The action is in this case taken by the executive Government and the responsibility is that of the executive Government. There is no reason why the Chief Justice should be placed in the somewhat awkward position which the Hon'ble Member proposes. The procedure proposed under the Bill for the investigating authority is not judicial ; that is a point which we have attempted to make clear from time to time ; indeed, I doubt whether the Chief Justice would be in a position to appoint the investigating authority. From my experience I believe also that Chief Justices would be the first to object to the proposal which the Hon'ble Member makes, which would have the effect of mixing them up with executive proceedings of this character."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I am sorry, my Lord."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" I beg to move, my Lord—

'That in clause 29 (2) for the words 'one shall be a person' the words 'two shall be persons' and for the words 'a person' the words 'an Indian' be substituted.'

"My Lord, the amendment is somewhat cryptic. The section refers to the constitution of the investigating authority ; it says that the investigating authority shall consist of three persons ; the status and character of two persons named in the clause are mentioned, i.e., to say one shall be a judicial officer not below the rank of a Sessions Judge, and the other a non-official ; but who the third is to be is not defined. I want to make the personnel of the investigating authority definite, and I suggest that two of the members of the investigating authority shall be officers not below the rank of District and Sessions Judges and the third shall be a non-official Indian. My Lord, we have some experience of these boards in Bengal, and, I believe, the suggestion that I have made is a suggestion that is generally followed in the constitution of these boards.

"I remember the work of one board. A dacoity took place not very far off from the place where I lived and the president was a District Judge. He was a High Court Judge for some time. There were two other members, and one was a retired High Court Judge. The Hon'ble the Home Member probably knows him, Dewan Bahadur Hari Nath Rai. The other member was a non-official. I know another investigating board and the constitution was upon the same line. These tribunals gave satisfaction in the performance of their duties. Inasmuch as you have that experience I want to embody it in the Bill. Having regard to the facts I have mentioned I hope my Hon'ble friend will see his way to accept this small amendment ; it does not in any way interfere with the scope of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I am sorry that I have to oppose this amendment. I know that the Hon'ble the Home Member will try to accept it."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I can assure Mr. Patel that I will not follow on the Council."

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"That is my view. I am not in favour of an Indian being on the investigating board, because we Indians do not hold ourselves responsible for the passing of this measure. I think no Indian should serve on these investigation boards."

6-13 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I was very pleased to hear from the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea that the investigating authorities or advisory committees that he mentioned do give such satisfaction. It was the more gratifying to me because some of the remarks which have been made from time to time in this Council indicated that they were of no use. We have now cogent evidence from a non-official member of this Council as to the value of their work. I am quite prepared to accept the amendment of the Hon'ble Member providing that the members of the authority shall be judicial officers. I would ask the Hon'ble Member not to insist on a statutory condition that one member should be an Indian as it is inadvisable to make these racial distinctions in a Statute. I will ask the Hon'ble Member, if he will take it from me, that we will issue instructions to Local Governments that one Indian shall certainly be on the boards."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"I accept that."

The motion* was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I beg to withdraw the amendment—

'That in clause 29 (2) for the words 'one shall be a person having held' the words 'two shall be persons having held' be substituted.' "

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"I beg to withdraw the amendment—

'That in clause 29 (2) for the words 'and one shall' to the end of the sub-clause the words 'the remaining two shall be practising pleaders of not less than 10 years' standing and not in the service of the Crown of India' be substituted.' "

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

6-16 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I beg to move the following amendment:—

'That in clause 29 (2) for the words from 'and one' to the word 'India' the words 'the remaining two being elected by the non-official members of the Legislative Council from among the elected members' be substituted.'

"I want one of the members of the investigating authority to be a judicial officer and that he should be associated with the members of the local Council elected by it. My object is that this may inspire confidence in the public, that if the administrative machinery to be devised by the Government should consist partly of elected members of the Council, who may be chosen from among a panel or otherwise selected, it would inspire confidence in the public. The elected men would be responsible to the voters and public safety would be promoted."

6-17 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I think the Government would be in some difficulty in this matter if they accepted this amendment. We have heard Mr. Patel say that he was quite unwilling that any member of the investigating authority should be an Indian. In what position would the Government be left in the matter? I do not think also that the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma

* That in clause 29 (2) for the words 'one shall be a person' the words 'two shall be persons' be substituted.

can have thought of the burden he was placing on the panel of members selected from the Provincial Council. I suggest it would be unwise for the Council to impose on non-official members a burden of this kind without consulting them."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I have not said that the gentlemen selected should be Indians, they may be."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"They have to be elected members."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"They may be Europeans?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Am I to understand that the Hon'ble Member intends to select members like Mr. Hogg or Mr. Ironside?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I am certain that 6-19 P.M. if Mr. Hogg or Mr. Ironside worked on the Provincial Council, there would not be very much difference in many essential points between them and their Indian colleagues. I have not suggested that the members who are to sit should be Indians, so there ought not to be any difficulty. As regards the second point raised by the Hon'ble the Home Member as to the burden that would be thrown on non-official members, if they are to be responsible men, if they choose to represent their country, they should take over this burden and to suppress revolutionary and anarchical movements, should help the Government by their presence on these bodies and by their co-operation. I think non-officials should be glad if the Government imposed this burden on them?"

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I beg to withdraw my amendment—

'That in clause 29 (2) for the words 'one shall be a person not in the service of the Crown of India' the words 'two shall be pleaders being non-officials and practising for not less than ten years' be substituted.'"

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I beg to move 6-20 P.M. the following amendment:—

'That in clause 29 (2) for the word 'one' the word 'two' be substituted and after the words 'in India' in the same sub-clause the words 'selected from a panel of six persons nominated by the Provincial Legislative Council' be inserted.'"

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I beg to withdraw my amendment—

'That in clause 29 (2) for the words 'one shall be a person not in the service of the Crown in India' the words 'one shall be a pleader being a pleader and practising for not less than ten years' be substituted.'"

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The motion that clause 29, as amended by the Select Committee, and as further amended, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. V. J. Patel; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

6-21 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 30, as amended by the Select Committee, do stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, the amendment that I wish to move reads thus :—

'That in clause 30 (1) after the words 'thinks fit' the words 'from a panel of twelve persons nominated by the Legislative Council' be inserted.'

" My Lord, this stands on a different footing, and I hope this will appeal to the Hon'ble the Home Member."

6-22 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I really do not think that the Hon'ble Member ever expected that we would adopt this amendment, and I believe that a panel such as he proposes would be most unsuitable in every way. Visiting Committees will be appointed for different centres to report upon the welfare of persons under restraint. There may be, I hope there will not be, unless conditions become bad, but there might be four or five different committees in one province in different parts because the members of the Visiting Committees should live near the places of internment so as to be able to look after the welfare of the individuals whom they are to visit, and it might be quite impossible to get suitable people living in the vicinity from the panel chosen by the Legislative Council. Even if it was in accordance with the Government idea of the constitutional position that the Legislative Council should take an authoritative part in a purely executive matter of this kind, a panel of 12 would not be sufficient

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" In that case you might increase the number. Make it 30."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" I have taken the amendment as it is put forward."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 30, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 31, as amended by the Select Committee, do stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

6-24 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" May it please your Excellency, I beg to move that Part III be deleted.

" Your Excellency, about the provisions of this Bill, the less said the better. After hearing, my Lord, I am bound to say that after three days' hard work I have now fully realised, considering the determined attitude of Government not to yield an inch of ground on any essential particular, that it is hopeless to expect anything in the direction asked for by this amendment. I therefore formally move the amendment and leave it to the good sense of this Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I have nothing more to add to what my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel has said. I have taken a vow not to speak any more to-night."

6-25 P.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My Lord, I support the amendment which has been moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel."

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

My Lord, I would like, if I may, once more to try to point out to the Government that there is no necessity for enacting such a piece of legislation as is provided for in Part III, and secondly, that it is not right that it should be so enacted. My Lord, this Part proposes to substitute executive for judicial authority in dealing with cases which are contemplated to be dealt with under it. Section 33 says that the Governor General in Council is to make a declaration, if he is satisfied of the fact, that in the whole or any part of British India anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted and that scheduled offences in connection with such movements are prevalent to such an extent as to endanger the public safety, by a notification in the Gazette of India, and that, thereupon, the provisions of this Part shall come into force in the area specified. Subsequent to that if, in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has been or is concerned in such area in any scheduled offence, the Local Government may make in respect of such person any order authorised by section 21, and may further by order in writing direct—

- (a) the arrest of any such person without warrant ;
- (b) the confinement of any such person in such place and under such conditions and restrictions as it may specify.

“ Now, my Lord, presumably the Local Government will have obtained some information ; it will be in a position to say that it has reasonable grounds for believing that a particular person has been or is concerned in any such offence as is mentioned here. Presumably that information will have come to the Local Government through the Police and its other executive officers, but not as the result of a judicial investigation. It is proposed that having obtained that information, the Local Government should have power to pass an order of the nature mentioned in section 21, or any of the other orders which are mentioned in the section. Under the ordinary procedure which is provided for in the existing Criminal Procedure Code, it is open to the Local Government to send such a case to a Magistrate for investigation. My friend the Hon'ble Mr. Patel, drew attention to it in dealing with Part II of this Bill. Section 108 lays down that :—

“ Whenever a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate, or a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, has information that there is within the limits of his jurisdiction any person who, within or without such limits, either orally or in writing, disseminates or attempts to disseminate, or in any wise abets the dissemination of—

- (a) any seditious matter, that is to say, any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, or,
- (b) any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 153-A., then such Magistrate may require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with or without sureties, for his good behaviour for such period, not exceeding one year, as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix.

“ Section 110 gives power to a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate and Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who, on receiving information that any person is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being enlarged without security hazardous to the community. I submit, my Lord, that this provision would cover a case such as the one contemplated in sections 32 and 33. It is the Local Government which would send the case to a Magistrate to deal with. But it is proposed in the Bill that the Local Government should itself pass an order. Is there any justification shown for it? If the Local Government has obtained some information which it is willing to place later on before an investigating authority, what on earth can be the objection to the Local Government placing the same information before a Magistrate in the service of the Government for judicial investigation? Has the Government lost confidence in its Magistrates? Is there any justification for suggesting or implying that the Government has any reason to suspect the honesty, the integrity or the ability of the Magistrates who are serving the Government at present? If there is not, will anybody tell me why the investigation of a matter of the character

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

we are discussing should be taken out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, and entrusted to an investigating authority which it is proposed to constitute? If the matter goes before a Magistrate, the man has got all the constitutional safeguards of liberty in having the charge or accusation which may be urged against him properly, judicially tried. He has the opportunity of knowing who his assailant or accuser is. He has the opportunity of knowing what that man has said against him, and he will have the opportunity of putting his evidence to test by cross-examination by the help of a trained lawyer. If the Magistrate should pass an order against him, he would have the opportunity of taking the matter to a High Court and getting the verdict of that Court upon it. I submit, therefore, that there is no justification shown why any case which may arise under section 33 should not be left to be dealt with the ordinary regular courts.

" My Lord, I want to make it clear that none of us for a moment wishes that men who commit crimes shall not be dealt with in the most effective way possible. As I have said repeatedly, these crimes injure my own countrymen most, and I am anxious that none of them should injure themselves or others by indulging in them. I am anxious and my friends are anxious that every reasonable step should be taken to check and eradicate anarchical and revolutionary activities and crimes, but we are also anxious that, in making that attempt, preventable injustice shall be duly guarded against. That is the whole reason of our anxiety for asking that judicial procedure and form should not be replaced by executive authority and action. If the Bill is not passed, it does not mean that the Government will be powerless to deal with such crimes. There is provision in the existing law to enable them to do so. And if it were shown, if it was proved by what has happened in actual cases that these provisions are insufficient, that a proper sufficient effort had been made by strengthening and improving the police, by appointing men who could be trusted to sift evidence and produce only evidence which was true : there might be reason for strengthening the police, improving the judiciary and taking such other steps as might be necessary to strengthen the judiciary. But because in some cases the attempt to bind over or to secure persons who might have been suspected of being implicated in crime or criminal movements has failed, I submit that does not afford any justification for putting aside the regular procedure of courts and substituting executive authority for them. My Lord, there have been cases of failure of justice in the past in the regular courts. But I have not heard it suggested that because there were failures of justice in some cases, therefore the ordinary courts should give place to unjudicial, executive bodies and that they should be left to deal with cases. It is necessary to realise the effect of the procedure that is now proposed. It will be this that the Local Government, on receiving information against a man, may by a mere executive order deprive him of his liberty. My Lord, as my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah has pointed out, as other Hon'ble Members have pointed out, we do value liberty. We oppose the Bill not because any of us is afraid that these provisions of the law may touch a Member of this Council, though one should not be too sure that they would not. We oppose it because we have concern for those who may fall victims to the exigencies of this procedure. The existence of extra-judicial regulations; of repressive, drastic legislation, has sometimes led to the employment of such provisions to the injustice, of individuals, and we are afraid that, if the proposed Part III of the Bill becomes law, it may lead in many cases to irremediable injustice. It is therefore that we are offering our stoutest resistance to the passage of this legislation.

" My Lord, it has been said by some that the impression created in some quarters by our opposition to this Bill would be that we are not sufficiently alive to our duty to our fellowmen to secure peace, order and good government. I cannot believe that such a charge will be advanced by any one who has a knowledge of facts. I hope that our persistent efforts in this Council and other Legislative Councils for years have shown that we have been labouring earnestly, strenuously, prayerfully, to promote the welfare of our fellowmen, and it is ~~and~~ that earnest desire to secure their welfare, to secure them from injustice, which leads us to offer this opposition. On the other hand, my Lord, there have been many instances in which Local Governments have erred. That is also a circumstance which we cannot forget, cannot get over. The rules made under the Defence of India Act gave power to Local Governments to adopt certain measures as emergency measures. Those powers have been abused in more than one instance, by more than one Local Government. And we fear that if the powers now proposed are given to Local Governments for three years in times of peace, there is a danger of their being exercised to the injury of individuals. For these reasons I would once more ask the Government to consider the existing provisions of the law and to be content with these provisions and to drop Part III of the Bill which is now before the Council. I venture to repeat that I feel sure that, if that is done, there will be no injury to any public interest. The apprehension that revolutionary and anarchical crimes may be revived is an apprehension against which there are many reasons and circumstances to be taken into account. If they should be revived in any measure, then it will be the time for the Government to consider and enact some special legislation, if it is shown that the existing legislation is insufficient. My Lord, to pass in advance, in apprehension of danger which may never arise, a piece of legislation which subverts the existing system of justice, which takes away powers which are at present exercised by the judiciary, and puts them in the hands of the executive, is an anomalous, dangerous and an unwise procedure. I earnestly wish and hope that the Government will yet see the wisdom of abandoning it."

The Hon'ble Mr. M. A. Jinnah:—"My Lord, I will only quote ^{6-40 P.M.} the words of a very great authority before I say anything more. In a very famous case, which is known as Daniel's case, one of the greatest jurists and lawyers laid down three propositions. The first proposition is that no man can be imprisoned upon the will and pleasure of any, but a bondman or a villein.

'The second proposition. If a freeman of England might be imprisoned at the will and pleasure of the King, or by his command, he were in worse case even than a villein.

The third proposition. A freeman imprisoned without cause is civilly dead.'

"My Lord, the provisions of Part III of this Bill will bring about this result. First, the selection of the victim will be left to the plenary discretion of the bureaucracy; secondly, my Lord, it means the negation of public safety and defence; and thirdly, my Lord, I say that it is poison to the commonwealth.

"My Lord, to quote the words of Lord Shaw in that famous judgment to which I have referred, this is what he says:—

"In the exercise of power that the Government have the plainest teachings of history and the dictates of justice demand that, on the one hand, Government power, and, on the other hand, individual rights, these two, shall face each other as party and party."

He does not say it is said it will not be so. Here, in the provisions of this Bill, the Government, as a party, shall act at its own command; the subject, as a party, shall submit and shall not be heard. The Government is at once to be party, judge and executioner. That, my Lord, seems to be Part III of this Bill.

"My Lord, I will not take up the time of this Council any more. I say, my Lord, that Part III is the blackest part of this black Bill. And, my Lord, I speak with this passion, with this earnestness, with this feeling, because, if it ever finds its place on the Statute-book, it will tarnish the fair name of India and Great Britain. I love India, but, my Lord, I do not love Great Britain the less, because, it has been the home of my training and education."

[Sir. James DuBoulay ; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

6-45 P M

The Hon'ble Sir James DuBoulay:—" My Lord, I rise to oppose this amendment. I do not think that I need traverse the same ground that was traversed this morning. We all agreed that these are not pleasant measures to have to introduce. It is only the necessity of the case that makes us introduce them.

" When the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya said that we had weapons in our hands that we can use, referring us to Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code, he ignored all that has been said here to-day about the impossibility of bringing evidence into court, the impossibility of following the usual forms of criminal procedure. The first thing that has to be done under that Chapter, when a Magistrate begins his inquiry, is to follow the rules for either summons cases or warrant cases. The witnesses have to come into court to be examined and cross-examined, and all those unavoidable features which we have introduced into the present Bill for the protection of witnesses would go by the board if we confined ourselves to Chapter VIII. He said that if the provisions of the ordinary law have been sufficient in the past, they ought to be sufficient now. We know that they have not been sufficient in the past. We know that if it had not been for the weapon that was placed in our hands by the Defence of India Act, we should have been in a state of chaos in Bengal. We were casting about for some means by which to meet the situation. The Defence of India Act was the weapon which enabled us to meet it, and that is the weapon which in a modified form we are asking you to allow us to continue to use.

" Again, he suggested that the police might have been strengthened. But they have been strengthened. I think anyone here who represents Bengal must know how the budget of the Bengal Province has gone up year by year, and what tremendous increases there have been to every branch of the police in Bengal.

" I cannot believe that the Hon'ble Pandit means that this Government ought to improve the High Court of Calcutta. I do not know what he meant by 'improving' the courts. The fact of the matter is that this Part III is merely an amplification of Part II. The principle is the same as in Part II. We have only a later stage of revolutionary developments here. In Part III we have the effects of revolutionary propaganda in operation and we have these scheduled offences prevalent. The more lenient measures that were sufficient when the movement was only threatening to result in these scheduled offences are no longer sufficient, and it is necessary to take the more drastic measures provided in Part III."

6-47 P M.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—" My Lord, so many cases have gone up to the Calcutta High Court in which these terrorists and people of that class have figured, that I do not doubt that it would be possible for Members of the Government to point to any remarks that might have been made in the judgments of the High Court, to the effect that the present law was not fully adequate to the occasion. It is not as if the repressive legislation which has been passed hitherto has not yet come up for discussion in the High Courts. It may be that probably the Hon'ble the Law Member or the Hon'ble the Home Member knows of such remarks; but so far as I recollect, whatever other defects in the present law the High Courts may have pointed out, I do not think they have in so many words said that they feel themselves incompetent to deal with the situation which has arisen in Bengal merely because the law is inadequate or insufficient. It has been assumed during the course of the argument on the official side that the Council, as well as the country, are agreed that the present law is insufficient, and that therefore it is in the highest interests of the State necessary that such extraordinary powers—unknown to English Law—I only hope I shall not be corrected because I am proud in English law—and unknown to Indian law, should be put into my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah, has already pointed out, the provisions of this Part are far more drastic than those of any other Part, because by proceeding under this Part, what do you do? You simply say to the man, 'Well, we the Government are satisfied that you have been concerned in some very objectionable and dangerous movement, and we are not going to give you a chance of testing the information that is in our possession, as you would have been entitled to do if we had placed you before a court of law.' My Lord, I submit that among the many things which are really extraordinary about this Bill, there is nothing more extraordinary than the provision of clause 33. Let us remember what it says. It says:—

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

'Where, in the opinion of the Local Government, there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has been or is concerned in such area in any scheduled offence, the Local Government may make in respect of such person any order authorised by section 21, and may further by order in writing direct—

- (a) the arrest of any such person without warrant;
- (b) the confinement of any such person in such place and under such conditions and restrictions as it may specify ;'

Provided that no such person shall be confined in that part of a prison or other place which is used for the confinement of convicted criminal prisoners as defined in the Prisons Act, 1894; and then it goes on to say some other things.

"Now, my Lord, when the law is set in motion, the only thing that has got to be done is that the Local Government has to say that it is satisfied about the complicity of the man. The moment it says that the man is taken under arrest and put into confinement, and then, and then only has he got any remedy. But what is the remedy? The remedy is that which is laid down in section 36, which says:—

'Where an order (other than an order for arrest or search) has been made under section 33, the provisions of sections 22 to 26 shall apply in the same way as if the order were an order made under section 21, save that, on receipt of the report of the investigating authority, the Local Government may, subject to the conditions prescribed by section 26, make any order which is authorised by section 33, and sections 22 to 26 and 28 to 31, shall be deemed to be included in this Part.'

The same procedure will apply to his case. Are we really persuaded that the procedure provided by Part II is one which will enable a person in that situation really and effectively to test the information on which the Government has taken such a serious step as to deprive him of his liberty and to put him into confinement? My Lord, I think this fairly beats the record of many things which are to be found in this Bill, and I venture to think, my Lord, that it is bound to create, as indeed it has already created, the utmost dissatisfaction and discontent in the country. What will be said is this, that a Government which finds itself unable to cope with the situation, although it has got such extensive and ample powers in the law, seeks shelter behind a law which is no law or—to use an expression which was once used by Sir Rash Behari Ghose—a 'lawless-law.' My Lord, I therefore submit, I ask you to think not twice but thrice before you accept this Part III. It is a very serious matter, and it is going to give rise to great trouble—far greater trouble than you have had in the past, and I certainly do not want to see my country plunged into any trouble at this juncture. I must respectfully but firmly protest against the provisions of this Part III; and as my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Patel, has said he fully anticipates that this Part will be passed, my Lord, I must say that I cannot possibly support this Bill but must oppose it and every Part of it."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I have already given 6-54 P.M. my reasons why I do not wish to make any speech on this amendment. I confess, however, I am surprised at the optimism of some of my non-official friends here. I thought they had already realised what I have realised now."

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; The President; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I move that clause 32, as amended by the Select Committee, do stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" The subject matter of his amendment, 7 P.M.

' That in clause 32 after the words ' he may ', the words ' with the concurrence of the Indian Legislative Council ' be inserted ' was discussed, your Excellency, in connection with Part II, so I do not propose to go over the same ground. I will only ask your Excellency to put the amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, for reasons that I have explained at some length before I cannot accept this amendment."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I beg to withdraw the amendment which stands in my name, namely,

' That in clause 32 after the words ' he may ' the words ' with the concurrence of the Indian Legislative Council ' be substituted '."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, the amendment which stands in my name is as follows :—

' That in clause 32 for the words ' in Council ' the words ' with the consent of the Indian Legislative Council ' be substituted '.

" I would rather put it, my Lord."

His Excellency the President :—" Would you like me to put it?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" Yes, my Lord."

The motion was put and negatived.

☛ The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I beg to move the amendment which stands against my name :— 7-1 P.M.

" That to clause 32 the following provisos be added :—

' Provided that no action shall be taken by the Governor General in Council, without giving the Indian Legislative Council or the Legislative Council of the province in respect of which such a notification is proposed to be made an opportunity of expressing its opinion by a resolution passed on the subject :

' Provided further that such notification shall at any time after the expiry of one year from the date thereof be withdrawn on the recommendation of the Indian Legislative Council or the Legislative Council of the province in respect of which it may have been made by a resolution passed by three-fifths of the members of either of the said Councils '."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 32, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I beg to move that clause 33, as amended by the Select Committee, do stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" My Lord, I beg to move that in clause 33 (1) after the words ' has been or is ' the word ' actively ' and after the words ' in any scheduled offence ' the words ' connected with any anarchical 7-2 P.M.

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; The President.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

or revolutionary movement' be inserted. The clause as proposed to be amended will read thus:—

'Where in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has been or is actively concerned in such area in any scheduled offence connected with any anarchical or revolutionary movement . . . etc. etc.'

"The amendment really consists of two parts. With regard to the first part, I invite the attention of this Council to clause 21 which has already been passed. There it is stated 'where in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person is or has been actively concerned in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20.' Well in this clause the word 'actively' does not occur. I should not have moved this amendment if the word 'actively' was not to be found in clause 21: but anyone who compares the provisions of section 21 with section 33 can justly contend that section 33 is really wider in its scope than section 21. Therefore it is that I propose that the word 'actively' should be inserted in clause 33 also.

"With regard to the second part of my amendment, I desire that the persons to be dealt with by the Local Government under clause 33 should be persons who, in the opinion of the Local Government, have been or are concerned in any area in any scheduled offence connected with anarchical or revolutionary movements. This is merely to make the intention of the Government clear and nothing more."

7-5 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I think that the last part of the amendment which the Hon'ble Member proposes will be met by an amendment of the Schedule itself by inserting therein the words which the Hon'ble Member seeks to insert here. I am afraid, however that I cannot accept the suggestion as to the insertion of the word 'actively' before 'concerned,' as the word would be misleading. A man may not be actively concerned in a movement; but the drafting department consider—and if I may say so, with all deference, I entirely agree with them—that it is unwise and unreasonable to put in the word 'actively' before 'concerned' when we are speaking of an offence. If by any chance it could be held to exclude a person who had instigated and not otherwise taken any active part in an offence, it would be open to objection. Suppose there is a conspiracy and a man is instigating it; he ought certainly to come within this Part, and there is no necessity whatever to insert the word 'actively'. I prefer to take the wording as it is at present."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I have nothing more to say, my Lord."

His Excellency the President:—"Do you wish the other part to be put?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I am going to oppose this amendment in toto; I want any amendment that is made to be put in the Schedule."

The motion was put and negatived.

7-6 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I beg permission to withdraw the next amendment, namely—

'That in clause 33(1) after the words 'the Local Government may' the words 'with the previous approval of the District and Sessions Judge of the District' be inserted'."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri; Sir William Vincent; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. V. J. Patel.]The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"I beg to move:—

'That in clause 33 (1) after the word 'Government' where that word occurs for the second time the following be inserted:—

'shall place all the materials in its possession relating to his case before a judicial officer not below the rank of a District and Sessions Judge and take his opinion thereon. After considering such opinion the Local Government, if it is satisfied that such action is necessary.'

"This amendment, my Lord, is on all fours with an amendment to section 21 which I moved sometime ago, which has been accepted with a slight change by the Government; and I hope this will also be similarly treated."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I am quite prepared, my Lord, to accept this amendment in the modified form which I suggested last time on the motion to amend clause 21.

"The amendment will run as follows:—

'... may place all materials in its possession relating to his case before a judicial officer who is qualified for appointment to a High Court and take his opinion thereon. After considering such opinion the Local Government may if it is satisfied that such action is necessary ...'

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"I accept that, my Lord." 7-8 P.M.

The motion as amended was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, I move—

'That in clause 33 (1) for the words 'may make' the following words be substituted:—

'Shall lay information before a Magistrate of the 1st class having jurisdiction in the area and the said Magistrate may on being satisfied of the truth of the information by following the procedure laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code for demanding security make.'

It has been discussed before. It may be merely put."

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I merely put this amendment, my Lord:—

'That in clause 33 (1) for the words 'may make' the words 'apply itself or through any officer to the investigating authority having jurisdiction in the matter' be substituted, after the word 'person' the word 'for' be inserted, and for the words 'further by order in writing direct' the words 'further apply for an order directing' be substituted.

The motion was put and negatived.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to withdraw the next two amendments standing in my name, namely,— 'That in sub-clause (b) of clause 33 (1) the words 'without warrant' be deleted and

'That in sub-clause (c) of clause 33 (1) for the words 'in the opinion of the Local Government has' the words 'prima facie appears to have' be substituted.

The amendments were by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I beg to move my amendment—

'That in sub-clause (c) of clause 33 (1) for the words 'prejudicial to the public safety' the words 'connected with any anarchical or revolutionary movement' be substituted.'

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I am prepared to accept the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I am glad your Excellency."

• The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I beg to move my amendment—
 'That in clause 33 (3) for the words 'use all means necessary' the words 'use all lawful means reasonably necessary' be substituted.'
 I understand from what took place in connection with a similar amendment to Part II that Government will consider this amendment favourably."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I accept the amendment."
 The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I beg to withdraw my amendments—

'That in clause 33 (3) the word 'lawful' be inserted after the word 'all,' and 'That after clause 33 (3) the following proviso be inserted :—

"Provided that the investigating authority when ordering the arrest of any person may provide for bail and when the arrested person is produced before it may then admit him to bail and '"

The amendments were by leave withdrawn.

The motion that clause 33, as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that clause 34, as amended by the Select Committee, and clauses 35 and 36 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that clause 37 do stand part of the Bill."

7-14 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I beg to propose my amendment—

'That in clause 37 after the words 'with fine' the words 'which may extend to one thousand rupees' be inserted'.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"I beg to withdraw my amendment—

'That in clause 37 after the word 'fine' the words 'amounting to one thousand rupees' be inserted'

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"I beg to withdraw my amendment—

'That after clause 37 the following new clause be inserted :—

'37-A. When the investigating authority finds that there was no probable or reasonable cause for applying for the arrest of any person or having any place searched, it may after giving notice to and hearing the prosecution, direct that any compensation be paid to the person and such compensation shall be paid by Government :

Provided that the receipt of such compensation by any person shall not be a bar to his right of bringing any suit for damages against any one for false and malicious prosecution which he might possess : but compensation must be taken into account in passing any decree in such suit'."

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The motion that clause 37, as amended, stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that clause 38, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill."

[14TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I move—

7-15 P.M.

'That for sub-clause (1) of clause 38 the following be substituted:—

'38 (1) On the expiration of the Defence of India (Criminal Law Amendment) Act, 1915, every person in respect of whom an order under rule 3 of the Defence of India (Consolidation) Rules, 1915, was in force immediately before the expiration of that Act and who has in the opinion of the Local Government been concerned in any scheduled offence shall be deemed to be a person resident in an area in which a notification under section 3 is in force, and the provisions of Part I shall apply to every such person accordingly, and every person who is on such expiration in confinement in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, shall be deemed to be a person resident in an area in which a notification under section 32 is in force, and the provisions of Part III shall apply to every such person accordingly:

'Provided that within one month from the expiration of the Defence of India (Criminal Law Amendment) Act, 1915, the Local Government may make any order of restraint which is authorised by Part III in respect of any person who is in confinement in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, and if such an order is so made, it shall be deemed to be an order made under section 26 (3) as made applicable by section 36, and the provisions of that Part regarding such an order shall apply accordingly.'

"My Lord, my amendment is rather lengthy, but I shall explain the position in two sentences. This is a very important amendment and I hope the Council will consider it very carefully. As clause 38 stands at present, it is proposed that persons already under executive control under the Defence of India Act or the Bengal Prisons Regulations of 1818 shall be deemed to be persons resident in areas in which the notifications under section 32 are in force, and the provisions of Part III shall apply to such persons. They are under executive control—some for 2, some for 3, and some for 4 years. These people, I submit, should now be dealt with under Part I and not under Part III. I restrict my amendment to cases under the Defence of India Act. I know that for 100 years the Government have had the power to deprive a man of his liberty under the Regulation of 1818. I do not wish to touch that power at all, but I appeal to the Council to consider the case of those persons who have been interned under the Defence of India Act passed by this Council, and for which this Council is responsible. I say with all the emphasis that I can command, that it is high time that if Government think that these persons are concerned in any offence, anarchical or revolutionary, and now as you are enacting special tribunals without a jury without commitment proceedings, with special rules of evidence without appeal, let these people have the chance of a trial—whatever the form of that trial may be—under Part I. I do not at all touch by my amendment the case of persons in executive control under the old Regulation of 1818. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea will take care of such cases and some day move a Resolution on the subject. I am at present concerned with the case of those under executive control under an Act passed by this Council. I trust the Council will accept this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"The amendment which stands in my name reads thus—

7-20 P.M.

'That in the proviso to clause 38 (1) for the words 'may make' to the end of the proviso the words 'shall either release such person or commence proceedings under Part I' be substituted.'

I do not propose to make a speech about this amendment. My only point is that these people have been under restraint for three and four years and have been kept in various places. Now it is time that we should either try and sentence them or release them altogether. There is no use hanging on in this nondescript condition of being neither judged nor sentenced. That is all my reason for proposing this amendment standing in my name."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, the view of the framers of the Report in regard to this question was as follows:—

'There are, however, a limited class of persons, namely, those who have been involved in the troubles which have been described who constitute a danger not contingent but actual. Special and immediate provision is required for their case.'

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

"The authors go on to discuss individual cases such as Rash Behari Basu

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"What page?"

7-21 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"Paragraph 196.

"Finally they say :—

'Assuming, however, that it is not desired to continue to deal with these men under the Regulation, we ought to suggest an alternative.

"They conclude thus :—

'Lastly, it may be that a few of those now merely interned and some of the convicts who will be released may require some control. At any rate, it is to be deprecated that the persons interned should have the assurance that on the expiry of the Defence of India Act they will at once and all at the same moment be immune from all restriction. They should be liberated gradually.

'It seems to us that the simplest device is to provide that in respect of acts committed before the Defence of India Act expires (or an earlier date if preferred) and danger apprehended by reason of such acts in the future, it should be lawful to proceed against any person under any of the provisions which we have outlined without any modification. In other words the new law is to be deemed to be operative for that purpose immediately.'

"The Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde now suggests that they should be released at once or put on trial. From figures which have been furnished to the Council and from information given by Mr. Banerjee, I think it is apparent that a great many of these men have been released. It is only a few of the more dangerous characters that are still under restraint. In fact that was an argument that was used just now against the Government for it was said that so few of these men are still under restraint that you really have no trouble in Bengal. I use the argument for a slightly different purpose, namely, to show that the Government have treated these men with every consideration, and that there is no probability that Government will seek to maintain restraints on any man if these restrictions can be removed without danger to the body politic. The power must, however, be retained in the public interest. The effect of the amendment would however be to make Part I, which is the punitive part of the Bill, apply to persons upon whom restrictions have been placed by the Defence of India Act. But if we had evidence to prosecute these people before a court of law, if the witnesses were ready to come forward, if they had not been terrorised by methods to which I have frequently adverted in this Council, we should have prosecuted them long ago under the Defence of India Act; and to suggest that when the Defence of India Act expires we should prosecute them under Part I of this Act is a proposal of no practical value. An examination of the amendment which has been put forward by the Hon'ble Member did lead me to a very careful consideration of the provision that is made in regard to these men, and it does appear that the application of Part III to these persons interned under the Defence of India Act is further than we need go. If the Hon'ble Member—I merely throw it out as a suggestion—if the Hon'ble Member likes to substitute in the amendment for the words 'section 3,' 'section 20' and for the words 'Part I' the words 'Part II,' I should be quite prepared to accept the modification, and this, although not giving him what he requires, would be making the law distinctly more lenient in respect of these persons. This proposal would also be, I think, fairer to the persons now interned, although the Bill as it stands reproduces what was contemplated by the framers of the Report. I do not know if I have made myself quite plain to the Hon'ble Member, but I will read it if necessary."

7-26 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I have understood it. Your Excellency, I must say that I feel very keenly on this question. The Hon'ble the Home Member has read to this Council the relevant portion of the Report of the Rowlatt Committee to show that the Committee holds that these persons should be dealt with under the provisions of Part III. He suggests that the proposed provisions of clause 38 are justified by the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee. My reading is otherwise. I shall read to the Council only two or three lines from the Report :

'It seems to us that the simplest device is to provide that in respect of acts committed before the Defence of India Act expires (or an earlier date if preferred) and danger apprehended by reason of such acts in the future, it should be lawful to proceed against any person under any of the provisions which we have outlined without modification. In other words, the new law is to be deemed to be operative for that purpose immediately'.

"What the Committee clearly says is that they are to be dealt with under the new law"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"May I interrupt the Hon'ble Member for one minute? May I ask the Hon'ble Member to read the preceding paragraph? I think I did read it."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—'Lastly, it may be that a few of those now merely interned and some of the convicts who will be released may require some control. At any rate, it is to be deprecated that the persons interned should have the assurance that on the expiry of the Defence of India Act they will at once and all at the same moment be immune from all restriction. They should be liberated gradually'.

"My Lord, I do not at all suggest that they should be liberated. I say put them on trial under Part I. I do not say that they should be liberated all at once. The scheme of the Rowlatt Committee's Report in regard to these legislative proposals is this. They first suggest punitive measures. Then they go on to suggest preventive measures, and, finally, under the heading 'Provision for existing danger' they suggest the treatment of existing offenders. So it is entirely a separate part and it clearly says that 'the new law is to be deemed to be operative for that purpose immediately'. So there is nothing to show that the Committee suggests that Part III should be made applicable to them. We can apply Part I, Part II or III. However, I stand to lose what little is offered if I were to refuse it, and therefore I accept the suggestion."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"If your Excellency will permit me, I should like to add a word, because my amendment comes under this." 7-30 P.M.

His Excellency the President :—"You accepted what Sir William Vincent said?"

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"Yes, I accept it, but there is something else I wish to say, and that is that after four years we cannot collect the evidence which is needed. With this observation I accept it."

His Excellency the President :—"The amendment will then read :—

'That for sub-clause (1) of clause 38 the following be substituted :—

'38 (1). On the expiration of the Defence of India (Criminal Law Amendment) Act, 1915, every person in respect of whom an order under rule 3 of the Defence of India (Consolidation) Rules, 1915, was in force immediately before the expiration of that Act and who has in the opinion of the Local Government been concerned in any scheduled offence, shall be deemed to be a person resident in an area in which a notification under section 20 is in force and the provisions of Part II shall apply to every such person accordingly, and every person who is on such expiration in confinement in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, shall be deemed to be a person resident in an area in which a notification under section 33 is in force, and the provisions of Part III shall apply to every such person accordingly :

[The President; Sir William Vincent; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir George Lowndes.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

' Provided that within one month from the expiration of the Defence of India (Criminal Law Amendment) Act, 1915, the Local Government may make any order of restraint which is authorised by Part III in respect of any person who is in confinement in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, and if such an order is so made, it shall be deemed to be an order made under section 26 (3) as made applicable by section 36, and the provisions of that Part regarding such an order shall apply accordingly.'

The motion was put and agreed to.

The motion that clause 38 of the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee and as further amended stand part of the Bill, was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I move that clause 39 do stand part of the Bill."

7-32 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I beg to move that in clause 39 for the words 'when a notification issued under section 3 or section 20 or section 32 is cancelled' the following words be substituted:—

'The Governor General in Council may, of his own accord and shall, on the recommendation of the Indian Legislative Council, cancel any notification issued under section 3, or section 20 or section 32 and '

I know that the amendment stands no chance and I do not wish to waste the time of the Council by making any speech."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Here again the Hon'ble Member seeks to vest the Legislative Council with authority which is in my judgment properly vested in the executive Government, and which is necessary for the discharge of the responsibility of the Government of India to the Secretary of State, and I am afraid I must for that reason refuse to accept this amendment."

The motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 39 stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that clause 40 as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I beg to move that clause 41 stand part of the Bill."

7-34 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, section 41 is a section about which I spoke a good deal when this Bill was introduced, and I said it was beyond our competence to pass it, especially that portion of it which says no civil suit shall lie, so I do not propose to go over the same ground now, but one part of it has been ruled against by the Privy Council. Then on the next question I wish to argue under it. I should like to have your Excellency's ruling before I do so. The amendment reads thus:—

'That for clause 41 the following clause be substituted:—

'In all trials, inquiries and investigations under this Act, the question whether the person charged and the offence alleged is or is not connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement shall be a question of fact to be determined by the Court or the investigating authority, as the case may be.'

"This is a point which was argued before and, I believe, it has been also argued to-day, and so far as the opinions of this Hon'ble Council were taken, they have been against it. If your Excellency thinks it is open to me to argue it, I shall say a few words, otherwise I shall leave it."

7-36 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I submit, my Lord, that any discussion of this amendment must be out of order; the question has been decided by the Council already. We had exactly the same amendments with regard to each particular and we have now the same question over again in general terms."

His Excellency the President :—"I think you felt rather doubtful about it, Mr. Khaparde; I agree with you, it is out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"But the first part of it remains, the civil suit which has been directly ruled against by the Privy Council."

His Excellency the President :—"But there is no amendment on that."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, that is amendment No. 179; I think there is some confusion in the mind of the Hon'ble Member; that is coming on later."

His Excellency the President :—"That is Mr. Chanda's amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I beg to move that in clause 41 7-38 P.M. after the words 'in any Court' the following words be inserted :—

'But the High Court shall have power to revise any order passed under section 26 or section 36 on the application by or on behalf of the person aggrieved made within 15 days of the date of the said order.'

"My Lord, we have now enacted and made the provisions of Chapters II and III, we have rejected suggestions regarding the rules of evidence, regarding the right of the accused to be represented by a pleader and even the right of the accused to appear personally. We have rejected the suggestion that the Local Government should have no power to appoint the investigating authority. Substantially therefore the provisions regarding the investigating authority remain as they are. The report of the investigating authority, the finding of the investigating authority, is also not to be binding on Government! The amendment proposed is intended to give to persons dealt with either under Part II or Part III, not in respect of interim orders but when the orders are made final, either under section 26 or 36 to move the High Court in revision. This is the last chance I submit should be given to these persons and I trust the Council will support me."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"This amendment strikes at the root of the Bill and would revive a matter which has been decided by the Council more than once. I have repeatedly tried, and at times I have thought I had succeeded in making it clear that the responsibility for these orders rests with the executive and not with the judiciary. Our view on the question may be right or it may be wrong, but it was at least clear. I wish to point out further that if we sent a case in which restrictions had been imposed under the preventive sections up to the High Court, this procedure would necessarily involve the publication of the whole of the information received and the change of the procedure from executive to judicial. I believe also myself that the judicial authorities would be the first to object to being called upon to decide questions after an investigation of this character. 7-40 P.M.

"I must certainly oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I now clearly understand the position of Government."

The motion was ~~and~~ and negatived.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir George Lowndes; The President; Sir William Vincent, Mr. V. J. Patel.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause 41 the words 'suit or' and the words 'or other legal proceedings' be deleted'

"The clause will then stand thus:—

'No order under this Act shall be called in question in any Court and no prosecution shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.'

"I can quite understand that if a man does anything in good faith he ought not to be prosecuted, but if by mistake he does injury to me, I do not see why he should be protected in case I wish to bring a suit against him for damages."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde rose.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"Might I intervene for one moment. I would earnestly ask my Hon'ble friend at this late hour not to raise a purely legal argument on the Moment case, which I know he is burning to do. I am quite prepared of course to meet my Hon'ble friend and argue it at length with him, but it would be useless to do so now."

7-12 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"I do not want to argue that matter. I only wish to bring it up now so that your Excellency may rule upon it; and your Excellency will have this consideration that this is a matter upon which the Privy Council has decided. In the Loreburn Committee's Report which I have already read out to the Council they say: 'After the passing of that Act, the Government of India have gone on framing Acts directly contrary to that ruling. Something like 30 Acts have been passed since.' The question is whether it is desirable to have a thirty-first one. That is the question which I would wish to put."

His Excellency the President:—"I do not propose to rule on the subject: I propose to put it to the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda's motion was put and negatived.

The motion that clause 41 stand part of the Bill was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I move that clause 42 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I move that the Schedule, as amended by the Select Committee, do stand part of the Bill."

7-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"May it please your Excellency, I beg to move—

'That for clause (1) of the Schedule the following be substituted:—

'(1) Any offence under the following sections of the Indian Penal Code, namely:—sections 121, 121-A, 122, 123, 124, 131 and 132.'

This is one amendment on which I feel certain I shall be able to convince the Government."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I will save the Hon'ble Member the trouble of convincing me; the very sight of the amendment has done it. I am quite prepared to accept it."

[14TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir George Lowndes; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I am very glad, my Lord."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause (2) of the Schedule for the words 'in the opinion of the Government' the words 'in the opinion of the Court or the investigating authority concerned' be substituted.'

I understand some change is going to be proposed by Government in connection with this clause, and I should like to hear from the Hon'ble the Home Member what that change would be."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, no change is 7-46 P.M. proposed under this amendment, but I propose to accept sub-modo the next amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. Perhaps it might be convenient if I state what I am prepared to accept. I am prepared to insert the words Mr. Sarma wants, namely, 'anarchical or revolutionary,' in the Schedule instead of the words 'endangering the safety of the State.'

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I rise to a point of order; the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's amendment is not before the Council now."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I know that, but I am only informing the Hon'ble Mr. Patel at his particular request what change I am prepared to make."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"It does not help me in the least, your Excellency. I beg to move:—

'That in clause (2) of the Schedule for the words 'in the opinion of the Government' the words 'in the opinion of the Court or the investigating authority concerned' be substituted.'

"My point, your Excellency, is this. Let the Local Government, if it is satisfied that the person is concerned in any movement of a revolutionary character, take action either under Chapter II or under Chapter III. Let the Local Government lay the information before the investigating authority or the Chief Justice. But what I want is that once the Court or the investigating authority is seized of the case, then it should be for the Court or the authority to say whether in its opinion the man is guilty of the offence, and also that it is connected with a revolutionary or anarchical movement."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, the Hon'ble 7-48 P. Member is moving under a very thin disguise really an amendment which has already been negatived by this Council. But if I may address the Council for two minutes I think I can show that his present proposal is utterly impossible. Take, for instance, Part I. Part I says 'If the Governor General in Council is satisfied that, in the whole or any part of British India, anarchical or revolutionary movements are being promoted, and that scheduled offences are prevalent, etc.' At that time there will be no Court or investigating authority appointed at all, and if you are to wait until that authority is appointed before you can say what a scheduled offence is, Part I could never be introduced; and the same applies to Parts II and III. So that if you substitute in the Schedule the words 'Court or investigating authority' for the words 'Local Government,' you render the whole Act impossible of application."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I do not think it is necessary for me to meet the argument for it will serve no useful purpose."

[Sir William Vincent; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir George Lowndes; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I should be glad to know if it is possible to meet the point I made, my Lord."

The motion was put and negatived.

7-50 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I beg to move—

'That in clause (2) of the Schedule after the words 'with any' the words 'anarchical or revolutionary' be inserted.'

Then the clause would stand—

'(2) Any of the following offences, if, in the opinion of Government, such offence is connected with any anarchical or revolutionary movement endangering the safety of the State.'

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, I am quite willing to accept the insertion of the words 'any anarchical or revolutionary movement,' and I hope that will be sufficient for my Hon'ble friend without keeping in the words 'endangering the safety of the State.' It is perfectly obvious, if I may say so, that an anarchical or revolutionary movement must endanger the safety of the State; it is really implied in the words 'anarchical or revolutionary movement.' Therefore the words 'endangering the safety of the State' should surely go out."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, we have not described what is a revolutionary movement and, if there is no harm in keeping in the words 'endangering the safety of the State,' I should be much obliged."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"I will withdraw my offer the Hon'ble Member does not wish to accept it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I will have the Hon'ble Member's amendment,—that the words 'endangering the safety of the State' may go out and the words 'anarchical or revolutionary' be inserted in the clause."

The amended motion was put and agreed to.

7-51 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"My Lord, my amendment is as follows:—

'That in clause 2 (a) of the Schedule the figures and letter '124-A' be deleted.'

"My idea in putting forward this amendment is that the offence of sedition stands on a totally different basis from the other offences included in Chapter 6 of the Indian Penal Code. At this late hour of the evening I do not propose to go into an analysis of all the offences included there, but the whole thing admits of being put into a few words. This section 124-A, really in English law at one time, formed part of the law of sedition, libel, slander and defamation. Since then it has become latterly a part of the law of treason, and it has become a little more complicated in that way. But, however, that may be, it is one of those offences that are neither anarchical nor revolutionary. Sedition means that a man in speaking speaks a little too much and sometimes a word escapes him; or in writing he writes one sentence more. And therefore, I am anxious that these people, these speakers and writers, might not be brought under the provisions of this Act. This is my object in proposing this amendment."

7-53 P.M.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shafi:—"My Lord, may I be permitted to point out that the offence under section 124-A, does not come within the purview of this section unless it is connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement. The Schedule says—

[14TH MARCH, 1919.] [Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Shaif; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

‘ Any of the following offences, if, in the opinion of Government, such offence is connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement.’

So that an ordinary article or speech or writing of the kind my Hon'ble friend is referring to will not come within the purview of this sub-clause unless it is connected with an anarchical or revolutionary movement.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—“ May I point out that there is not much safety, because it is only the opinion of the Local Government which determines the existence of the connection and not the finding of the judges ? ”

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—“ My Lord, I rise to give my cordial support to this very important amendment placed for the consideration of this Council, at this late hour, by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde. The question is really very very serious. If this Council will see the next amendment which stands in my name, it says :—

‘ That in clause 2 (a) of the Schedule the figures and letters ‘ 124-A., 153-A., ’ be deleted.’

“ My Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde wants the deletion of one section 124-A. I want the deletion of two sections, 124-A. and 153-A. My reasons are these. This is again a matter, a most essential matter, in which the Government goes beyond the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee. As I pointed out when discussing Part I there are already provisions in the Criminal Law Amendment Act similar to the provisions in Part I; perhaps it was for the insertion of these two sections that Government intended to undertake this legislation. It is very difficult to understand why Government should go out of its way to insert these two sections, for which the Rowlatt Committee makes no recommendation. My Lord, section 124-A, if included in this Schedule, will kill all political agitation in the country; and I respectfully submit that no case whatsoever has been made out by Government to include those two sections, in doing which you go beyond the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee. I invite the attention of this Council to page 147 of the Rowlatt Committee's report, paragraph 186, last but one sub-paragraph :—

‘ The cases to be tried subject to the provisions above sketched out will be such as are ordered to be so tried by Government, the power to make such orders being limited to certain classes of offences to be named in a Schedule. This was the scheme of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, the Schedule to which might be adopted.’

And what is that Schedule, I pray ? My Lord, if you will turn to the Schedule attached to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, you will find that those are the very sections which do not find a place there—the only two sections—and I am surprised at their inclusion in this Schedule. I do not for a moment suggest that your Excellency's Government have the remotest idea of killing constitutional political agitation in the country; but the effect of the insertion of these two sections—I warn my non-official colleagues—will be what I say, namely, the killing of political agitation in this country. I do not wish to attribute any motives, but I submit that unless there is a clear and satisfactory explanation on the part of Government for going beyond the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee, I am absolutely certain people will put the construction which I have suggested.”

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—“ My Lord, I have a similar amendment* in my name and I associate myself with the eloquent remarks of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel.”

* That in clause 2 (a) of Schedule the figures and letters “ 124-A ” and “ 153-A ” be deleted.

[Sir Verney Lovett; Sir William Vincent; Mr. V. J. Patel; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [14TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett:—" My Lord, the last sentence of the clause to which the Hon'ble Mr. Patel referred runs thus :

'This was the scheme of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, the Schedule to which might be adopted.'

"We did not say 'should be adopted', we said 'might be adopted'. We threw it out as a suggestion. That is all I have to say, my Lord."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" My Lord, there has been what I can only describe as an amazing mis-statement of the intentions of Government in enacting Part I of this Bill. It is suggested that the Government deliberately propose to enact Part I of the Bill in order to introduce these two sections

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—" I beg pardon. I rise to a point of order. I never said the Government deliberately inserted them. I have all along said that it is likely to be interpreted as such unless there is a satisfactory explanation

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" My recollection is, as I said, that the insinuation of the Hon'ble Member was what I have said, namely, that the Government did this deliberately

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—" I am sorry for the recollection of the Hon'ble Member."

7-59 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" If I am wrong, I can only regret it ; but I have a clear recollection of the same thing being said in connection with Part I. At any rate, whether I am right or wrong in that, as apparently there is room for misapprehension on the point, let me assure the Council that there is no ground at all for any such apprehension. I tried to explain very fully the reasons which led us to make Part I of the Bill and I think it is generally admitted that we depart there very considerably from the Act of 1908 in many matters.

"I had also hoped we had taken every step to reassure the public and the members of this Council that this Bill will not and cannot be used for the suppression of political agitation. It certainly shall never be so used with the consent of any of the members of the Government of India. I do not believe it can possibly be so used ; but the real question before the Council is, whether sections 124A and 153A should remain in the Schedule, when offences under these sections are directly connected or when connected with a revolutionary or anarchical movement whether an offender under these sections is entitled to any more consideration than an offender under the other sections which are mentioned in the Schedule. Section 124A deals with a person who brings or attempts to bring into hatred or contempt or excites or attempts to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government ; and section 153A deals with offences promoting ill-feeling between different races ; but the offences only come within the purview of this Schedule when they are connected with a revolutionary or anarchical movement and I can myself see no reason for excluding either of these sections from the Schedule."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" My Lord, neither the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett nor the Home Member have answered the objection which has been raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel to the inclusion of sections 124A and 153A in the Schedule. My Lord, as more than one official member has referred to the proceedings of the Select Committee, I hope I also may be permitted to refer to them to this extent, that it was I who suggested the exclusion of these two sections from the first part of the Schedule as it stood in the Bill as it was introduced, namely, offences against the State

[14TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. V. J. Patel ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I also suggested it."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Yes, I do not want to claim credit for myself alone ; I was going to point to something else, and it was that that suggestion was not adopted, but the two offences were included after some consideration by the Government in the second part of the Schedule

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" May I correct my Hon'ble friend ? Section 153-A was always in the second part of the Schedule though section 124-A was in the first part."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" Yes, ^{8-2 P.M.} I thank the Hon'ble Member. Now, the position with regard to these two sections is very clear. All that the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett has said is that the Rowlatt Committee has suggested that the Schedule to the Act of 1908 might be adopted. He has not told us that there is anything in the Rowlatt Committee's Report which would support the inclusion of the two sections under consideration in the Schedule. The Hon'ble the Home Member has said that if an offence which falls under section 124-A or 153-A is in the opinion of the Local Government connected with revolutionary or anarchical movements it should be triable under Part I. Now, my Lord, the whole trouble arises from the fact that the question whether an offence under section 124-A or 153-A is or is not connected with a revolutionary or anarchical movement is to be determined not judicially but merely by the opinion of the executive Government. It is a very serious matter to deprive an individual of the constitutional safeguards of life and liberty by the judgment of an executive Government, and I therefore very strongly support the amendment of Mr. Patel that these two sections should be excluded from the Schedule. My Lord, the result will not be that persons who may be guilty of these offences in connection with revolutionary movements will go unpunished. The law can get hold of them if they have been directly or indirectly connected with revolutionary or anarchical movements. If, on the other hand, the Government has not evidence enough which it can put before a judicial court to establish a connection of the offence under trial the absence of such evidence, the want of sufficient evidence, should not be made good by the opinion of the executive Government arrived at upon evidence which is not sufficient to be put before a law court. For these reasons, my Lord, I strongly support the proposal, and though it seems hopeless to expect it, it is to be very much wished that the Government will see their way to adopt at least this amendment. This will remove a great deal of apprehension which has been aroused in the minds of the people. My Lord, in this country as in other countries the determination of the question of whether a speech or writing is seditious is one of the most difficult matters which comes before the courts. And situated as we are in this country there are special reasons to apprehend that when an executive officer of Government considers a particular individual particularly objectionable, any speech made by him, any article written by him in an area to which the Act has been extended, may be regarded, in the opinion of the executive Government to be connected with any revolutionary or anarchical crime that may happen to exist in any part of the province. Criticisms of the policy and measures of Government, criticisms of the vagaries of administrative officers, criticisms of the defects of the administration are abundant, unfortunately too abundant ; and owing to the fact that the governing class belong to another country, to another race, there is always the danger of a man being charged, without the slightest justification in fact, with exciting feelings, against Government, when he is criticising the measures of the administration with the sole desire of having the administration improved. If there is strong virile criticism of the defects of Government in any province at a time when in some parts of it, a few misguided individuals might be indulging in ideas of anarchical or revolutionary movements, the individual who has been criticising the measures of Government with the honestest of motives, with absolutely no idea of suggesting either the subversion or overthrow of Government, with the sole desire of making an unholy system of administration, satisfactory, that individual will run the risk of being hauled up by the opinion of an executive Government, of being tried by a tribunal under Part I and of being deprived of the safeguards which the constitution has hitherto provided.

“There is also another class of cases which may fall under section 153-A. Owing to the great ignorance which prevails among the vast section of the people, there are differences easily excited among Hindus and Muhammadans, and other classes of His Majesty's subjects living in this country. There may be some unfortunate individuals who may have started the trouble, and that trouble may have no connection with any revolutionary or anarchical movement. But if at the same time there should happen to be in the part of the province in which this activity may be going on some writing or speaking in connection with these unfortunate religious disputes, the result will be disastrous to those individuals who may have been writing about these matters without the remotest intention of encouraging revolutionary or anarchical movements. For these reasons, my Lord, the inclusion of these two sections in the Schedule is particularly dangerous, and it is much to be wished that Government may yet see their way to exclude the two sections from the Schedule.”

8-10 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—“My Lord, I beg to support this amendment and to say just one word why I support it. Throughout this discussion whenever non-official criticism has been sharp it has been said by the spokesmen of the Government that this distasteful business has been undertaken by them because the whole of this troublesome question was referred to great experts, and they were bound to accept more or less the opinion of this expert body and act on their advice.

“In support of this every important section and paragraph of the Rowlatt Committee have been quoted and whenever a certain provision was stigmatised as being very stringent it was put to us that it did not go beyond the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee. Every anxiety was shown hitherto to make it clear to us that even the widest powers taken will fall within the limits laid down by the Rowlatt Committee. Why in regard to these two sections they have gone beyond the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee they have not made clear although directly asked. The only thing that I have heard, and that is a very inadequate explanation, is that ‘might’ is very different from ‘should’. That is nothing whatever. It does not touch the matter. I should like some light on this point. Sections 124-A and 153-A are sections which to all political workers are matters of constant dread. I say frankly in the course of these proceedings that Government if it wants to establish absolutely beyond all doubt that this Act will not apply, either by themselves, their successors or their subordinates, to offences under sections 124-A or 153-A with which political workers are constantly concerned, if they want to make that point clear it can only be by the exclusion of these two sections. At this late hour I have not the slightest desire to detain the Council at length, but I wish to associate myself heartily with the observations that have fallen from my Indian colleague that there is a great apprehension in the public mind that this Bill when it becomes law, will have the effect of stifling public life or at any rate of creating stagnation therein. I believe that much of the agitation which your Excellency's Government is witnessing is prompted by that apprehension and the Government is bound to take note of it. It may be that it is exaggerated because what is unknown, what is to come is likely to be magnified in the largest proportions, but all the same there is this apprehension and it has found expression in this Council Chamber. It has found emphatic expression outside the Council and I beg your Excellency's Government to take cognisance of this apprehension and to remove it by not including these two sections in the Schedule of the Bill.”

8-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—“I have nothing more to add, your Excellency.”

[14TH MARCH, 1919.] [The President ; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.]

His Excellency the President:—"I will take Mr. Patel's amendment first. Would it not be convenient to put one amendment instead of three?"

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"I have no objection."

The Hon'ble Mr. Patel's motion was put and the Council divided as follows:—

H. M. SMITH,

Offg. Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.
LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Tuesday, the 18th March, 1919.

PRESENT:

His Excellency BARON CHELMSFORD, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., G.C.M.G., G.C.B.E., Viceroy and Governor General, President, presiding, and 58 Members, of whom 50 were Additional Members.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Is it permissible, your Excellency, to take up new business at an adjourned meeting of this Council?" 11 A.M.

His Excellency the President:—"I do not know what the Hon'ble Member is referring to. I am dealing with the questions."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Is it permissible to take up new business at an adjourned meeting, and this is an adjourned meeting."

His Excellency the President:—"I think that we must get on with the business. Of course if Hon'ble Members do not wish their questions answered, I am quite willing to forego the questions, but I think the feeling of this Council is that they would like to have their questions answered, and I propose to allow the questions to be put."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoj Currimbhoj asked:—

1. "What amount of money, if any, have Government earmarked or set aside for expenditure on renovating existing railway lines, replenishing rolling-stock and building new lines in the immediate future?"

11-1 A.M.
Expenditure on renovating existing railway lines, etc.

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied:—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to paragraphs 44, 57 and 58 of the 'Narrative of the Hon'ble the Finance Member introducing the Financial Statement for 1919-20,' from which it will be seen that it is proposed to spend Rs. 9.75 crores on Revenue account and Rs. 26.55 crores on Capital account on railways next year. Of this latter sum, about Rs. 17 crores is to be spent on new rolling-stock and on improvements incidental to replacement of stock worn out or sent overseas for war purposes. The Revenue expenditure on replacement of rolling-stock is about Rs. 5½ crores.

It has not been found possible for want of funds to provide for commencement of work on any new line next year, but a sum of Rs. 76.22 lakhs has been set aside for expenditure on new lines already in hand. The balance will be devoted to renovating existing lines and to various works urgently necessary to provide facilities for traffic."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur asked :—

Removal of restrictions on food grains.

2. " Do Government now propose to remove the restrictions on the movement of food grains from one province to another within India ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

" The Hon'ble Member is referred to the Press Communiqué on the subject which was issued on the 25th January and which shows that, subject to the condition of obtaining a priority certificate from the Director of Civil Supplies in the importing province, restrictions have already been removed over the inter-provincial movements of all food-grains except wheat, rice and gram, the control of which the Government of India have decided to retain in their own hands for the present."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur asked :—

Shortage of railway wagons.

3. " Are Government aware of the great hardship experienced and loss sustained by merchants in all parts of India on account of the shortage of railway wagons, and will Government be pleased to take early steps to minimise the difficulties now experienced in the transport of goods ? "

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

" In the replies given by me on the 1st of March to questions asked by the Hon'ble Member on the subject of the reduction of passenger fares and increasing the number of passenger trains, I referred him to a Press Communiqué recently issued by the Railway Board, a copy of which I laid on the table.

Government are aware that inconvenience is being experienced by merchants owing to the restrictions on goods traffic, but, as explained in the Communiqué above referred to, the cessation of hostilities has not in itself removed the difficulties of the railway position in India, and although everything possible is being done to expedite the supply of rolling-stock and accessory equipment, it must necessarily take some months before railways can be put in a position to deal readily with all the traffic offering."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya asked :—

Appointment of Indians on the military side of the Indian Medical Service.

4. " How many Indians have been appointed to any of the following appointments on the military side of the Indian Medical Service :—

- (i) on the staff of the Director, Medical Services in India,
- (ii) as Assistant Director, Medical Services, Division or Brigade,
- (iii) as Deputy Assistant Director, Medical Services, Mobilization,
- (iv) as Deputy Assistant Director, Medical Services, Sanitary,
- (v) on Field Services in charge of—
 - (a) Field Ambulance,
 - (b) Casualty clearing hospitals,
 - (c) Stationary hospitals,
 - (d) General hospitals."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

(i) No Indians have been appointed on the staff of the Director, Medical Services in India.

(ii) In 1916 one Indian held the appointment of Assistant Director, Medical Services, Poona Divisional Area, and afterwards of Assistant Director, Medical Services, Allahabad Brigade, as a temporary measure.

(iii) No Indians have been appointed as Deputy Assistant Director, Medical Services (Mobilization), but one Indian is holding the appointment of Deputy Assistant Director, Medical Services, Eastern Persian Cordon.

(iv) No Indians have been appointed as Deputy Assistant Director, Medical Services (Sanitary)

(v) Indians have been appointed to the command of complete Medical Units as follows :—

(a) Field Ambulances	4
(b) Casualty Clearing Hospitals	2
(c) Stationary Hospitals	5
(d) General Hospitals	2"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya asked :—

5. "Do Government propose to take any steps to ensure that in future Indians shall have a larger measure of opportunity for service and distinction in both the departments, civil and military, of the Indian Medical Service?"

Appointment of Indians to the Indian Medical Service.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"Indian officers of the Indian Medical Service share with European officers an equal measure of opportunity for service and distinction in both the departments, civil and military, of the Indian Medical Service. The question raised therefore by the Hon'ble Member demands no action."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda asked :—

6. "(a) Is it a fact that the Indian Ordnance Factory clerks submitted memorials to His Excellency the Viceroy and the President, Indian Munitions Board, detailing their grievances in having to work extra hours, to forego all holidays during the war and to work on Sundays, without any extra remuneration?"

Memorials of clerks of the India
Ordnance
Factories

(b) Is it a fact that the Director of Ordnance Factories in forwarding the memorials recommended 50, 40, 30 and 20 per cent. war allowances till such time as the Department should be reorganised?

(c) Has any order been passed on the memorials?

(d) Is it a fact that the European employes of the Ordnance Factories have been granted 20 per cent. war allowance and two months' pay as bonus since April 1918 and promised further consideration of their case?"

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"(a) Memorials have been received from certain Indian Ordnance Factory clerks, addressed in some cases to the President, Indian Munitions Board, and in others to His Excellency the Viceroy. These memorials contain references to the clerks having to work overtime and to forego a portion of their holidays, Sundays in some instances being specifically mentioned. The clerks who memorialised have in some cases stated that they have worked overtime without extra remuneration, in others that they have received some extra remuneration. It may be mentioned that Ordnance Factory clerks employed outside the main offices regularly receive overtime pay."

[His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir James Meston; Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

(b) In forwarding the memorials the Director of Ordnance Factories adversely criticised the prayer for overtime where it is not already admissible, but recommended the grant of war allowances of 50, 30 and 20 per cent. of pay, to cover the increased cost of living. †

(c) Orders have been passed sanctioning the payment, to civilian clerks in the Ordnance Factories, of war allowances, in accordance with the scales sanctioned by the Local Governments, for their own staffs, according to the territorial jurisdiction in which the factories are situated, except in the case of factories located in Bengal, where the scale sanctioned is the same as that granted to the staffs of Imperial offices located in that Presidency. These orders are of a temporary nature; the reorganisation of the entire establishment is under consideration.

(d) In May 1918 orders were issued granting to the permanent sanctioned European establishment of certain classes a bonus calculated at one-third of a month's pay for every six months of work since August, 1914 to 31st December, 1917, subject to a maximum of two months' pay in all. These orders did not apply to clerical staff.

A 20 per cent. war allowance from the 1st April 1918 has been granted to all civilians in permanent non-gazetted appointments, but persons holding clerical appointments or appointed in England on special agreements regarding bonuses are specifically excluded from drawing the allowance. In the orders issued on this subject it was stated that the allowance was sanctioned as a measure of temporary relief pending consideration of a complete permanent reorganisation of the entire Ordnance Factories establishment."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda asked :—

The date for the beginning of the financial year.

7. " Did the Royal Commission on Indian Finance and Currency report in 1914 as follows : ' The late Finance Member of the Viceroy's Council has described the framing of a budget as a gamble in rain. We would observe, however, that the description applies only because the budget is taken before the monsoon. It is clear in fact that from the financial point of view the present date is the most inconvenient possible for the budget, and the suggestion has therefore been made that the date of the beginning of the financial year should be altered from the 1st April to the 1st November or 1st January.' "

Do Government propose to take any action on the lines suggested ? "

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston replied :—

(a) " The answer to the first question is—Yes.

(b) And to the second question,—Not at present. Apart from other reasons, it would obviously be undesirable to introduce this complication into the financial adjustments which the Reforms proposals will entail between the Government of India and the provinces."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur, asked :—

Subordinate establishment of the Accountant General and Deputy Accountant General's Office at Calcutta, Madras, Delhi and Nagpur.

8. " Will Government be pleased to state the number of clerks (i) Hindu, (ii) Musalman and (iii) Christian, in the subordinate service in the offices of the Accountant General and Deputy Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs, at (a) Calcutta, (b) Madras, (c) Delhi and (d) Nagpur ? "

The Hon'ble Sir James Meston replied :—

" The information is being obtained and will be handed to the Hon'ble Member as soon as it is available."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir Claude Hill; Sir C. Sankaran Nair.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

9. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a recent speech by the Hon'ble Mr. Mehta at a meeting of the Bombay Corporation in which he referred to alleged big stocks of rice, gram and wheat?"

Mr. Mehta's speech re big stocks of rice, gram and wheat.

(b) Have Government made any inquiries regarding the alleged stocks? If so, what is the result of these inquiries?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"(a) The attention of Government has been drawn to Mr. Mehta's speech.

(b) Inquiries have been rendered difficult by the Hon'ble Mr. Mehta's unwillingness to disclose the names of his informants and his inability to state the names of the merchants to be in possession of the alleged stocks. Careful inquiries, however, have been made, but have failed to disclose the existence of any considerable stocks withheld from sale or export."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

10. "Does the sum of Rs. 30 recently fixed by Government as the rate of freight on rice from Burma to Bombay represent the actual cost to the Admiralty or does it leave them any profit?"

Freight on rice from Burma to Bombay.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"As was stated in the Press Communiqué issued by the Government of India on the 10th February, the rate paid by the Admiralty to the Shipping Companies is a monthly hire rate and in addition thereto there are certain other charges which have to be paid by the Admiralty for the use of all vessels requisitioned by them. This monthly hire rate must necessarily be lower than the rate which can legitimately be charged as freight on rice cargoes from Burma, since it is by no means the case that steamers carrying rice from Burma to India can find full return cargoes for their journey from Bombay to Rangoon, while in port the days of loading and the days of discharge reduce the earning capacity of a vessel. Government have no information whether the present reduced rate of Rs. 30 leaves any profit to the Admiralty."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

11. "Will Government be pleased to say when the report of the Calcutta University Commission will be published?"

Publication of the Report of the Calcutta University Commission.

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to the reply given to a question asked by the Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri on the 12th March, 1919."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

12. "Will Government be pleased to publish :—

(a) The total annual expenditure on account of the Educational Adviser to the Secretary of State for India?

The Educational Adviser to the Secretary of State for India.

(b) The heads which comprise the expenditure and the amounts under each head?

(c) The names, qualifications, designations and the individual salary, weekly, monthly or annual of the entire staff of the Educational Adviser?

(d) The names of the local advisers to the Educational Adviser, the emolument or salary of each such adviser, the allowances each of them is entitled to draw, and the exact qualifications of each?"

[Sir C. Sankaran Nair ; Mr. V. J. Patel ; Sir Claude Hill ; Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

"The matters to which the Hon'ble Member's question refers are under the control of the Secretary of State for India. The Government of India are not in possession of full information on the subject, which would enable them to give the details asked. The Hon'ble Member's attention is invited to the Report on the Work of the Indian Students' Department, July, 1915—June, 1916, which is the last formal report received; and to the Press Communiqué recently issued, which indicated important changes in the system of guardianship of Indian students at Oxford and Cambridge, where the agency is no longer under official control."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Lease of 21,
Cromwell Road, London.

13. "(a) Are the premises known as 21, Cromwell Road, London, used as a hostel for Indian students? On what terms were the premises leased and what is the rental paid?

(b) Are portions of the premises sublet to the Northbrook Society and the National Indian Association? If so, on what terms and rental?

(c) What portion of these premises is in actual use as a hostel and how are other portions utilized?

(d) Is it a fact that there is not enough room for the students in the portion assigned to the hostel? If so, what steps are proposed to be taken to remedy this grievance of the students?"

The Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nair replied :—

"The premises known as 21, Cromwell Road, provide accommodation for Indian students as well as for the Society and the Association mentioned by the Hon'ble Member. The details of their apportionment rest with the Secretary of State, and the Government of India have no definite information.

As regards the rent paid for the premises in question and the portions thereof realised from the Society and the Association, the Hon'ble Member is referred to the statement on page 21 of the Report on the Work of the Indian Students' Department, July, 1915—June, 1916."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Freight of wheat from Australia to India.

14. "(a) What is the rate of freight at which wheat is shipped from Australia to India?

(b) Does this rate of freight charged to Australian wheat leave any profit to the Admiralty or does it merely meet the cost?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"No uniform rate of freight has been fixed for Australian wheat shipped to India, but the Shipping Controller is supplying tonnage at rates based on the actual cost. The Home Treasury have only agreed to this specially favourable arrangement in view of the assistance rendered by India in the past in the matter of wheat exports, and on the understanding that the wheat will not be sold at a profit."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay asked :—

Commissions in the Indian Medical Service.

15. "(a) How many persons have accepted temporary commissions in the Indian Medical Service since the beginning of the war up to date, and of these how many are Europeans and how many Indians?

(b) How many persons have been granted permanent commissions in the Indian Medical Service since the suspension of the Indian Medical Service Examination, and of these how many are Europeans and how many Indians?"

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief; Sir William Vincent; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; The President.]

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

“(a) 918 temporary commissions have been granted in the Indian Medical Service since the beginning of the war, 112 to Europeans and 806 to Indians.

“(b) 50 permanent commissions have been granted in the Indian Medical Service since the suspension of the Indian Medical Service examination, 33 to Europeans and 17 to Indians.”

INDIAN CRIMINAL LAW (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ My Lord, I move that the Bill to provide for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, as amended by the Select Committee, be republished in the Gazette of India and the local official Gazettes in English, and be also published in the local official Gazettes in such other languages as the Local Governments think fit. 11-14 A.M.

“ I do not think that I need discuss the details of the Report at present, because the intention is to republish the Bill as amended by the Select Committee. That decision I may say was arrived at in agreement with all the non-official and official Members of the Committee who attended the sitting. It appears to me moreover that it would be premature at this moment to discuss the details of the Report, and that we shall be able to do so better in the light of the criticisms and opinions which may be received. Hon'ble Members will no doubt observe that one clause to which great attention was drawn, namely section 124 B, has been omitted in toto from the Bill as amended.”

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—“ My Lord, I should like to know whether the Hon'ble Member means that when opinions have been received the Bill will be reconsidered by the Select Committee. Before I proceed further, I should like to have that information.” 11-15 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ My Lord, I think it is a little unfair to ask me to prejudge a question of that kind before the opinions are received.”

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—“ I did not catch the words of the Hon'ble Member after ‘unfair.’ I should like to know whether the Bill is to be reconsidered by the Select Committee after opinions have been received. I take it from the remarks of the Hon'ble the Home Member that the Bill will be circulated for opinion. Did he mean that the Bill with the opinions will be considered in this Council only, or did he mean that it would be reconsidered by the Select Committee first and then come before the Council ? ”

His Excellency the President :—“ The Hon'ble Member received his answer from Sir William Vincent, who told him that it was premature at this stage to prejudge what action would be taken when the opinions were received.”

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—“ In that case, my Lord, I move as an amendment that we add a proviso further that on receipt of the opinions the Bill should be re-committed to the Select Committee.”

[The President ; Sir William Vincent ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble Member has not given notice of this amendment. He knows perfectly well that three days' notice is required for an amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, may I speak on this question? I should be very glad to forego any claim to notice, as I know the Hon'ble Member has not had sufficient opportunity of giving it."

His Excellency the President:—"I must enforce the rules as they stand, but of course if the Member in charge does not wish to press for notice, it is a matter for the Hon'ble Member's decision."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Lord, the rules provide that on a motion like this the motion might be either that the Bill be considered or that it might be re-committed when the Report is before the Council. However, I do not want to go into that and I will go on. I raised this point at this stage for one particular reason which I should mention in addition to what I have already said. The Report of the Select Committee has told the Council that I and Mr. Khaparde, who attended the first meeting of the Committee, absented ourselves on the second day and that Mr. Patel announced his intention of not signing any Report the Committee might make, and withdrew from the Committee. Now, my Lord, I should like to state the circumstances under which I withdrew from the Select Committee, because I owe it to the Council that that explanation should be before the Council. The statement in the Report is partially correct; so far as it goes it is correct, but it does not state the reason why I retired from the Committee, and I wish, my Lord, simply to inform the Council that I did so in view of the ruling passed by your Excellency, or an order whichever it may be, that no Member of the Select Committee who had not signed the Report of the majority of the Committee could append a separate minute of dissent to the Report. My Lord, I wrote to inquire whether that ruling would be reconsidered, but as your Excellency was advised that it could not be reconsidered and I was informed that there was no reason to reconsider it, I felt that there was no other course open to me except to withdraw from the Committee until that ruling was reversed"

His Excellency the President:—"The Hon'ble Member must not discuss my ruling of the other day. That ruling stands; the Hon'ble Member must accept it."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"I want to submit one point in regard to this, my Lord. I could not discuss that ruling, my Lord, on the day that it was passed, and I am not discussing it now. I am raising a question of a privilege of a Member of this Council. Of course I bow to your Lordship's ruling, but I think I am right in seeking an opportunity to explain to the Council why I acted as I did. If your Lordship thinks I have not that right, I will bow to the decision"

His Excellency the President:—"I will never stand in the way of any Hon'ble Member trying to place his position fairly before this Council, but I must certainly prevent any Hon'ble Member from discussing any ruling I have given from the Chair, and the Hon'ble Member must confine himself to such remarks as he wishes to make outside that ruling of mine."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"In that case I will say this much only, that I wish to supplement the statement in the Report of the Select Committee that I absented from the second day with this statement that I did so because of the ruling (I do not discuss the ruling because of the ruling passed by your Excellency) that a Member of a Select Committee could not append a note of dissent to the Report of the Committee unless he signed the majority Report."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"My Lord, I am not guilty of 11-20 A.M. not giving notice. I had given notice of an amendment to motion No. 1 as it appeared on the Agenda first circulated to Hon'ble Members. That motion reads thus :—

'To move that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be taken into consideration.'

"That was the motion that stood in the name of the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent in the Agenda as first circulated to Hon'ble Members. That motion does not appear in the Agenda that we have got to-day, and I should like to know, if your Excellency has no objection, whether it is permissible for an Hon'ble Member of this Council, after a motion is entered on the Agenda, to drop it without the permission of this Council?"

His Excellency the President :—"I am afraid I must ask the Hon'ble Member to repeat the question."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I should like your Excellency's ruling as to whether a Member of this Council is entitled to withdraw a motion that has been entered on the Agenda once circulated to Hon'ble Members, except in the Council and with the permission of this Council."

His Excellency the President :—"I should like to hear the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent in the circumstances."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, as far as I know there is nothing in the rules to prohibit the issue of a revised Agenda. The original Agenda was, it is true, sent out in a certain form. It was found subsequently that the present form was more convenient. I am not aware that the Hon'ble Member can force me to make a motion which I do not wish to move."

His Excellency the President :—"Do you suggest that the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent can be forced to move that motion?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I understand that motions once entered on the Agenda cannot be withdrawn except in the Council and with the permission of the Council."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I think the Hon'ble Member is confusing two things, a motion merely on the Agenda paper and a motion which has been actually moved. There is nothing in the rules to suggest that a motion must be moved because it has appeared on the List of Business."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I think there must be some express provision in the rules which would justify a Member withdrawing a motion."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"If the Hon'ble Member's objection arises in relation to his amendment, I am quite willing to waive any objection on that score. That is really the only practical objection that he had put forward an amendment to the motion originally in the Agenda; I am quite willing that he should move it to the present motion."

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President ; Mr. Malcolm Hogg ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I am going to move that amendment, but the question I have raised is a question pertaining to the privileges of the Members of this Council. The question is whether a Member of this Council is entitled, without coming to the Council, and without the permission of the Council, to withdraw a motion that has been entered on the Agenda and circulated to the Members."

His Excellency the President :—" I rule that he can."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I am glad the Hon'ble the Home Member consents to my moving the amendment of which I had given notice. I adapt that amendment to the motion which now stands in the name of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ' that the Bill to provide for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be shelved ' "

The Hon'ble Mr. M. N. Hogg :—" I rise to a point of order. Is the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment an amendment to the amendment moved by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, which is already before the Council ? "

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Mine is a separate amendment of which I had already given notice."

His Excellency the President :—" It is extremely inconvenient for the Chairman to rule when he is not in possession of the amendments that are before the Council. I have not in my possession the amendment that has been moved by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and, until I can see that amendment, I cannot say whether the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's amendment is an amendment to it."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I have handed it to the Hon'ble the Home Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" So far as I am concerned I gave notice of an amendment to the original motion and not of an amendment to the amendment of which I did not know anything."

His Excellency the President :—" I think we must dispose of the Hon'ble Pandit's amendment before we come to the question of your amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Your Excellency, I support the amendment of my Hon'ble friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya reserving to myself the right of moving my amendment after that is disposed of. I support it on this ground."

His Excellency the President :—" I should like to warn the Hon'ble Member that I think, if this amendment is carried, that the only way in which the Hon'ble Member will be able to move his amendment then will be by voting in the negative on the amendment before this Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I could not follow your Excellency."

His Excellency the President :—" The difficulty is to follow the working of your mind. This amendment is that the Bill be recommitted to the Select Committee. If the Council carried that amendment, all that you can do, when moving your amendment, is to vote in the direct negative, because your amendment is merely a negative to it. Therefore, that is the course that you should follow."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[The President; Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir George Lowndes; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"For the time being I will support the amendment of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and will discuss what should be done with my amendment when it comes on."

"The reason why I support the amendment, your Excellency, is this. The amendment, as I understand it, is that after opinions are received the Bill should be recommitted to the Select Committee. My reasons are these. On the 28th of last month we met for the first time in Select Committee, and for reasons which it is not necessary for me to trouble the Council with, I withdrew from the Select Committee. On the 1st of March we had a Council meeting. No motion, which I expected would be made, was made for substituting another Member of this Council in the Select Committee for the Member who withdrew."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I should like to say that the Hon'ble Member did not resign his position on the Select Committee; he merely absented himself."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"The fact, your Excellency, is that, after some discussion in the Select Committee on certain matters and after entering my protest, I withdrew. I said 'I shall have nothing to do with your Committee, I go away.' It was perfectly clear that another man was wanted in my place. On the 1st of March, there was a meeting of this Council, no such motion was made. However, I do not complain of that. On the 5th there was a second meeting of the Committee and two Members sent in their resignations to the Hon'ble Chairman of the Select Committee."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"May I correct my friend? I did not send in a resignation. I said I could not take part in the general proceedings until that ruling was reversed. I expected, my Lord, that it would be laid before the Council and that a ruling would be passed by the Council, and I waited for that."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"That is tantamount to leaving the Committee. A third Member, the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde, sent in his resignation."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I do not think so."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"The Hon'ble the Law Member

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"I only desire to explain that no Members of the Committee resigned. They merely said they regretted they were unable to attend. I do not think they even said they regretted."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"It is clear, your Excellency, that three Members of the Select Committee declined to serve on the Committee for certain reasons. There were two intervening meetings of the Council, one on the 1st and one on the 6th or 7th before the Report of the Select Committee was presented to this Council, and yet no steps were taken to come to this Council, place the facts before it and ask for orders. The Select Committee, in the absence of these three Members, went on with their work easily, made up this Report and presented it on the 8th to this Council."

"Under these circumstances, it is absolutely necessary, your Excellency, that the Bill should be recommitted after its republication. Shall I have another opportunity of speaking?"

[The President ; Sir William Vincent ; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

His Excellency the President :—"Not on this amendment."

11-30 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I am only speaking now to this amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya, that is, the question whether this Bill should be necessarily recommitted to the Select Committee when the opinions of Local Governments and High Courts are received."

"The point that I want to make is that if modifications are proposed, if changes are necessary, if opinions vary and a further examination of the Bill is required, there is no question but that there will have to be a fresh reference to the Select Committee. All I ask the Council is to wait until opinions are received before deciding the question. Surely that is not an unreasonable attitude to take up, and I hope that the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya will realise that. We do not in any way say that we will not recommit the Bill. We only say that a decision would be premature now. The Council will have a full opportunity of considering the question later. Nor has this Council or the Government ever been unwilling or unready to commit Bills to Select Committee when there has been any necessity for it."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"My Lord, the question whether the Bill should be recommitted to the Select Committee or not can only be decided by this Council, and my motion will make it unnecessary for the matter to be brought up again before the Council. I move this amendment, my Lord, under rule 32, which says that any Member may move that a Bill, which has been amended by the Council or by a Select Committee, be republished or recommitted"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" 'Or recommitted' not 'and'"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" 'Or recommitted'. I never said 'and'"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"That is, however, exactly the course which the Hon'ble Member is suggesting, that it should be republished and recommitted."

Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—"I did not suggest it was 'and' here."

" be republished or recommitted, and, if the Council so decide, the President may order the Bill to be republished or recommitted, as the case may be."

"My whole point is that now when the matter is before the Council, and public time being valuable, we may at least have this much of imagination as to think that the opinions of the High Courts and Local Governments, of officers of the Government and public bodies, which will be invited, will deserve the courtesy that they should be considered by the Select Committee before the Bill is finally placed before this Council ; and I submit that instead of postponing this question of recommitment to a later date, this is a very suitable opportunity for considering it now. I recognise that the Hon'ble the Home Member is not hostile to this amendment. If the motion is now accepted, it will save an unnecessary expenditure of time in the future."

11-33 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"My Lord, may I move an amendment ?"

His Excellency the President :—"No, you may not, Mr. Chanda. We are at present ready to divide on the question of Mr. Malaviya's amendment, and until that is disposed of, no Member can move any other amendment."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda ; The President.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" I want to move an amendment to this amendment, my Lord."

His Excellency the President :—" Then you should have moved your amendment before the Hon'ble Member replied. You are now out of court."

The Hon'ble Pandit Malaviya's motion was put and the Council divided as follows :—

The amendment was therefore negatived.

His Excellency the President :—" Now, Mr. Patel, you may carry on."

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

11-39 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Please, your Excellency, I have the honour to move :

' That the Bill to provide for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, as amended by the Select Committee, be shelved.'

His Excellency the President :—" On that amendment, Mr. Patel, I must rule that it is out of order, because it is merely the negative of the proposal which is at present before Council. The Hon'ble Member can speak to the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent's motion ; but his amendment does not amount to anything more than a pure negative."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I bow to your Excellency's ruling. I beg to oppose the motion moved by my Hon'ble friend, Sir William Vincent. He proposes that the Bill as amended by the Select Committee be republished. Now what is this Bill which is to be republished ? It is a Bill to provide for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. Now, my Lord, if you read the clauses of this amended Bill, you will find not a word regarding any amendment of any section of the Indian Penal Code. See section 1. It gives the short title. Section 2 enacts the insertion of a new clause 196-B in Act V of 1898, Criminal Procedure Code. Then comes clause 3 amending section 343, Act V of 1898, Criminal Procedure Code.

" Then comes clause 4 which proposes the insertion of a new section 510-A in Act V of 1898, that is, the Criminal Procedure Code. No doubt it is true that the Bill, as originally introduced, contained two clauses, clauses 2 and 7 for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code ; it also contained a Schedule for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code ; but what is now proposed to be done is to republish the Bill as amended by the Select Committee. The Bill begins thus : ' A Bill to provide for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.' Now, I put it to this Council to consider whether the Bill as amended by the Select Committee is a Bill to provide for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code at all. Is this the kind of Bill amended by the Select Committee to be submitted to the High Courts, and to the Local Governments and to other bodies for opinions ? What will they think of us ? What will they say of the Select Committee appointed by this august assembly, your Excellency ? Is this in any sense really a Bill to amend the Indian Penal Code ? Then we go on to clause 1 : ' This Act may be called the Indian Criminal Law (Amendment) Act 191 . ' Will this Bill be an Act to be called the Indian Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, or will it be called an Act to amend the Criminal Procedure Code ? I put it to this Council to consider whether it is worth while sending this kind of Bill out to the public as the Bill which the Select Committee has considered. Well, apart from that, your Excellency, as I have pointed out, this Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, merely refers to the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code. That being so, the question arises whether it is worth while proceeding further with this Bill at all. You have undertaken, or at any rate have had under consideration for a long long time, a general revision of the Criminal Procedure Code. That being so, I submit to this Council whether it would not be desirable, it would not be right, it would not be proper, to insert these few sections in that Bill which will be considered probably in September or next March in this Council, or whether we should proceed piece-meal and amend important Acts in this manner.

" There is another reason, your Excellency, why this Bill should not be taken up at all but may, if necessary, be included in the big Bill that will come before Council, I mean the Bill for the general revision of the Criminal Procedure Code. I invite the attention of this Council to clause 3 which says ' To sec. 343 of the said Code the following Explanation shall be added, namely :—

' Explanation.—A promise of protection to an accused person against criminal force or any promise properly and reasonably incidental to a promise of such protection, shall not be deemed to be the use of influence within the meaning of this section :

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent.]

Provided that—(and here I draw the attention of Council especially)—the presiding judge or magistrate has been informed of the terms of any such promise before the accused person is examined as a witness.”

and further—

‘Where the presiding judge or magistrate has been so informed he shall not disclose to the defence the terms of any such promise except to such extent as he may consider it necessary so to do in the interests of justice.

Now, my Lord, there is no provision in our Criminal Procedure Code hitherto for an examination of an accused person as a witness on oath; and how will this particular amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code in the absence of any provision for the examination of the accused person on oath fit in with the Criminal Code? Unless and until you have a provision in the Criminal Procedure Code providing for the examination of an accused person as a witness on oath, this provision of law, which is proposed to be inserted, means nothing. It must follow the provision for an examination of the accused person as a witness on oath. It cannot surely precede such a provision. It may be argued that such a provision is intended to be introduced in the Criminal Procedure Code. True; it may have been intended; but it is after all for this Council to decide on the merits or demerits of such inclusion. Even assuming that this Council will carry such a provision, is it at all right that this Council should pass this particular clause and insert it in the Criminal Procedure Code before such a provision is passed by this Council, a provision which may have been intended by Government to be introduced in the Criminal Procedure Code? I therefore, submit, your Excellency, that it is not at all right that we should insert this provision on the assumption that at some future date this Council will amend the Criminal Procedure Code so as to provide for the examination of an accused person as a witness on oath. Then, again, it may be contended that the other Bill which the official majority is going to pass to-day does contain a provision for the examination of accused persons on oath. True, it does contain that provision; but that is not an amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code at all. It stands altogether on a different footing, it is a different Act altogether, and it is an Act which is to be in force for a period of three years. Here you are introducing in the permanent law of the land a provision on the supposition that another provision will certainly be passed by the Council at some later date. Is that, I put it to you, a reasonable position for this august assembly to take? I do not wish to add anything more to my arguments.”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ My Lord, the only reason of importance which the Hon'ble Member adduced for not republishing this Bill was that it would be more convenient that the provisions of the Bill should be dealt with when the Criminal Procedure Code comes before this Council for amendment. The position is this : the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill has been published and circulated for opinion and opinions have been received. The course, therefore, which the Hon'ble Member proposes would mean that the Council or the Committee of Council which dealt with this Bill would not have the opinions of Local Governments on it or of High Courts, because they have already reported on the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill. The next criticism that the Hon'ble Member made was on the modification of section 343 where he alleged that there is no provision for an accused person giving evidence. I was always under the impression that when an accused person was tendered a pardon he became an approver and could give evidence. I believe that I am correct; there is no reason why an accused person should not give evidence in such circumstances if he receives a pardon. At any rate if the Bill is open to the criticism which the Hon'ble Member makes, I submit that it is all the more necessary that we should have further expert opinion upon it. At the same time I am tempted to regret that the Hon'ble Member did not attend the Select Committee and favour us there with his criticisms; we should have greatly benefitted

11-49 A.M.

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent.] - [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"The Hon'ble Member knows very well that I did not attend that Committee at all."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"That is exactly what I say. We have not had the benefit of the Hon'ble Member's legal knowledge and acumen on the Bill, and it is this that I regret. The Hon'ble Member is quite correct in saying that though the Bill was amended in Select Committee and the clause which proposed to insert a new section in the Penal Code has been omitted, the title has not been altered, but at most this is only an error of drafting. Further, the Council might have decided that that clause should be reinserted and circulated for opinion and till that point was settled any alteration in the title might have been considered premature. But none of these arguments are of any weight in regard to the motion before the Council. We simply say 'here is a Bill recommended by a great Committee of lawyers, we have cut out one and we say to the Council let us now republish the Bill and invite public opinion, on it'—a course which the Hon'ble Member has himself asked us to adopt again and again, almost ad nauseam. Now when we propose to republish the Bill the Hon'ble Member says 'What! republish! I never heard of such a thing. Let us drop it altogether'. I submit that the Government are being treated with some want of consideration in this matter."

The motion was put and agreed to.

CRIMINAL LAW (EMERGENCY POWERS) BILL—concluded

11-54 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I beg to move that in the proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 39 of the Bill to cope with anarchical and revolutionary crime as amended, after the words 'the Local Government may' the following words be inserted, namely :—

'Subject to the conditions prescribed in the first proviso to sub-section (3) of section 27 as made applicable by section 37.'

"This is really a consequential amendment to one moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi on Friday last to clause 27. His amendment provided that Government issue a draft order to the person concerned likely to be affected by an order under section 37 (3) before the order was made final. In accepting a later amendment from the Hon'ble Mr. Patel of clause 39 I forgot I had accepted the previous amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi. The result was that an order might, as the Bill stands, be made under section 39 without giving the person affected by the order an opportunity of showing cause. I am quite sure that the Council will agree to the introduction of a consequential amendment of the kind now proposed, which really is in favour of the person affected by the order. I do not think I need add any arguments at this stage in favour of it."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, the second amendment which I now move is a consequential amendment of exactly the same nature as the one previously moved in sub-clause (2) of clause 39. I move that in the proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 39 after the words 'the Local Government may' the following words be inserted, namely :—

"Subject to the conditions prescribed in the first proviso to sub-section (3) of section 27."

"The reasons for this amendment are similar to those which I have already given."

The motion was put and agreed to.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Sir George Lowndes ; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—“ My Lord, it is usual to 11-58 P.M. call attention to any small drafting changes made in a Bill, and it is not usual to insist that the amendments should be moved. I think if that is the sense of the Council I need only go through them and give any explanations that are called for.

“ In clause 7 there has been a slight alteration merely to make the meaning clearer. Instead of the word ‘ they ’ we have put in the words the ‘ said provision ’ and instead of ‘ therein ’ ‘ of this Part. ’ Then coming to clause 17 we have put in the word ‘ section ’ before 402. It is merely more correct drafting. Similarly in clauses 22, 35, 36, 38 (1), 41 (2), we have inserted words to show that it is the sub-section so and so of section so and so. In clause 28 we have struck out the words ‘ the provisions of ’ and left ‘ made under. ’
The words ‘ under the provisions of ’ got in per incuriam. In the proviso to clause 41 (2) this Council has extended the period of detention to 21 days.
Referring back to clause 25 the Council will find that there are two different periods mentioned, namely, 7 and 15 days. It is obvious that the intention was to refer to the longer period of the two. We have, therefore, inserted ‘ maximum ’ before ‘ period. ’ That is to say the 15 days will be extended to 21.

“ If any Hon'ble Member wishes me to move the amendments formally I will do so, but it is usual to accept them without a formal motion.”

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—“ My Lord, the Council will 11-59 P.M. remember that on the last occasion when the Bill was under discussion certain amendments were accepted in clause 19, I think, by the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda and in 26 by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel. If Hon'ble Members will read clause 19 they will see the manner in which effect has been given to the decision of Council. The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda has examined the amendment as now drafted and is satisfied that effect has been given to what he desires. Similarly, as to clause 26, there is a proviso (c) which embodies the modification proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel in amendment No. 112* at the last debate. Sub-clause (5) also embodies another amendment of his. I understand from him also that these amendments are in accordance with his wishes and they are certainly in accordance with the decision of the Council. There is no question of moving them because they have been passed. I merely mention them as I thought the Council would like to know that the Hon'ble Members have approved of the amendments. Having done this, my Lord, I think it is my duty to turn to the merits of the Bill and to move that the Bill to cope with anarchical and revolutionary crime as amended be passed.

“ My Lord, in making this motion, I must at the outset express my great regret that in spite of the modifications which we have made in this Bill in our attempt to meet the wishes of non-official members, we have not been able to secure more support for this measure. But I think that most of the non-official members here will admit that the attitude of the Government in this matter has not been unreasonable, and that they have done their best to meet them in introducing important modifications in the Bill. At the same time, I quite realise the feelings of many Hon'ble Members in regard to this measure.
I appreciate the fact that they are based on an instinctive dislike of the law and on an apprehension that the powers may be abused. There are possibly members who are actuated by other motives, but I do not address myself to them. I address myself to those whom I believe to be anxious to co-operate with the Government and who yet feel the greatest apprehension regarding the use which may be made of this Bill. Well, my Lord, I should be very glad if they would consider the position a little from the point of view of the Government. We have examined it from their point of view ; We have done all that we can to meet them and have made changes in the Bill which I think have commended themselves to Hon'ble Members as improvements. The

*That in clause 25 (2) after the words ‘ relevant and reasonable ’ the following proviso be inserted :—

‘ Provided that the investigating authority shall, if the person in question applies to him for process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or thing, issue such process, unless for reasons to be recorded he deems it unnecessary to do so and for this purpose, such authority shall have all the powers conferred by the Code on a Court.’

[Sir William Vincent.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

position as it appears to Government is very clear. The facts are well known. This revolutionary movement is here as is abundantly proved by the findings of the Rowlatt Report which are corroborated by the observations of Messrs. Beachcroft and Chandavarkar in their memorandum, and indeed, if further confirmation of the findings is necessary, it is to be found by that grim history of crime which Hon'ble Members will find detailed in the Report and indeed often in the daily newspapers. I want the Council to remember that this statement of the findings of fact was not arrived at by the Government or by any biased tribunal, but by a thoroughly impartial and independent one.

"It has however been alleged that this revolutionary movement, if it once existed, is dead and that there is now no reason for such action as we propose to take—I think my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea rather takes that line—I wish that this were true, my Lord, and I wish that it was not incumbent upon us to introduce legislation of this character. I will not repeat now the arguments to show that this movement is there very alive, but I will only ask the Council to read again the statements made in the first debate in this Council, and to say then whether or not this movement is not unhappily still prevalent. I admit that it has been scotched; but it is not killed, and I should look upon any revival of it as a very very terrible calamity. My Lord, I would like to ask, if this movement is dead, if there is now no revolutionary party, why is it that the Bengal Council recently on a motion for the release of the internees decided to do nothing of the kind, that a Resolution to this effect was negatived without division, and the mover of that Resolution found no speaker to support him in the Council.

"My Lord, I have been told, and I entirely believe it, that the members of this Council sincerely sympathise with the Government in their desire to suppress this form of crime. My regret is that this sympathy of the Hon'ble Members is not sometimes a little more constructive. We have here keen thinkers, great speakers and acute lawyers, all of whom have combined upon destructive criticisms of this Bill. So far as it is possible, we have accepted much of this criticism modifying the Bill in very important particulars. It has been suggested by some members that the changes that have been made are not important, but I do not think, that that can really be argued by any one who examines the Bill as introduced and as it stands now. Another argument which has been put forward is the suggestion that the present law is adequate to meet our requirements, that section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the provisions of the Penal Code and the Act of 1908 provide us with all that we require. Well, my Lord, I ask the Council to consider the broad facts and whether it is not proved to the hilt that these measures are inadequate. I ask them to read the Report again, to consider the history of crime therein revealed, to remember what the character of the authors was, and once more to go back to the memorandum of Beachcroft and Chandavarkar which I regard as most valuable; I ask them to read the speeches made by Mr. Provosh Chandar Mitter and others in the Bengal Council recently, and I believe that they will agree that this position cannot be maintained.

"The main criticism of the Bill, my Lord, however, is based on a different line. It is said that it is an unfair infringement of the liberty of the subject, that it is repugnant to all ideas of western justice. This aspect has been put before us with very great force by many speakers. I do not know if it is fair to single out individual speakers but I should like to say that the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri and the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah, though he is not here, put this matter in a way that moved all of us and prompted a careful reconsideration of the facts. My Lord, we admit that this is a drastic measure and a departure from ordinary principles. But I want the Council to look at the position more from a practical point of view rather than from a theoretical one. I want them again to remember what I said very often, and cannot repeat it too often—I want them to remember the authorities by whom this Bill was recommended. I want them to remember that they were all except one judicial officers who would be entirely unlikely to suggest legislation of this kind if there had been any other remedy which would satisfactorily meet this evil. I want the Council also to again remember that the circumstances in which this law can be brought into operation and the people to whom it can be made to apply are very special. It can only apply when revolutionary crime is prevalent, and then only to persons found to be actively concerned in those crimes.

“My Lord, I have heard a great deal during this debate of the liberty of the subject and of the privileges of citizenship. Sometimes I wish I had heard a little more of the duties and responsibilities of citizenship which are equally important, and even now I ask the Members of this Council to co-operate with the Government and the authorities in crushing this movement through the ordinary Courts of justice, to use their great authority, their weighty influence in inducing the public to assist us in this matter; to get members of the public to come forward as witnesses courageously and to do their duty as jurors or in whatever capacity it may be in connection with the case honestly and fearlessly. My Lord, even now if we secure that support from the public I believe that the necessity for bringing this Bill into force in any place will be much less cogent. It is with that object, not as any kind of reproach, that I am asking again for the co-operation of Members of this Council in crushing this movement. I advert to this because we are anxious not to put this Act into force save in case of real necessity. It has been suggested that we are always anxious to take drastic powers, that we seek to increase our authority and our prestige by legislation of this character. My Lord, those who are familiar with the history of the Government of India know that there really is no foundation for that assertion. If Members of Council read this very report they will find there that the Government of India refused to the last moment, though pressed repeatedly to do it, to enact the Defence of India Act. It was only when we were forced by circumstances of a very cogent character that we undertook that legislation. My Lord, I have said something of the sense of civic responsibility, but it may well be urged on the other side that our system of administration is ill-calculated to foster it, and further that these repressive measures to which I have alluded can never prove a permanent and effective remedy for discontents in the body politic. Both these facts I admit and it is, my Lord, for that very reason that simultaneously with this measure we are proceeding to promote a sense of civic responsibility, to remove the cause of this discontent by changes in the constitution and in the system of administration in this country through a measure which we all hope will shortly be laid before Parliament. It is well, my Lord, on the other hand, to remember that no reasoned political progress is possible unless the public peace is maintained, that anarchy and revolution are the greatest enemies of sane political advance, and it is for this reason that we seek the support of Council in this measure. My Lord, I have now very little more to say. The Bill has been examined and discussed in the greatest detail, and there are really only two points which remain to which I wish to refer, in order to allay, as far as I may, the fears of those who think firstly, that the law can or will be abused, and secondly, that even in the case of these young revolutionaries it may have the effect of driving young men to further sedition and making them worse than they are at present. My Lord, it is far from the desire of Government that any of these young revolutionaries should be further embittered, and I think if the Council were aware of the efforts which are made by the authorities at present to reform these young men, to lead them to saner habits of thought in the hope that they may realise that the path of the future of India does not lie through treason and murder, I think if the Council knew of these facts, the Government would at least get some credit for its efforts in that direction. I have cited particular cases to individual Hon'ble Members of this Council in which these efforts have been successful. I think Mr. Ironside referred to one recently here, and I believe that the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea will bear me out as to our policy in this matter. I wish to assure the Council that it will be our earnest endeavour, should it unfortunately ever be necessary to put this Act into operation, to adopt all measures possible to help these young men into the right path and wean them from their criminal propensities.

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

Finally, my Lord, should it ever be necessary to put this Act into force, I can only assure the Council that we will make it our duty to see that it is used only for the suppression of revolutionary and anarchical offences, a form of crime which we believe to be of the greatest danger to the future of this country."

12-16 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"My Lord, I beg to move that in the motion that the Bill be passed, for the words 'be passed' the words 'by the Council be republished' be substituted. The motion as amended reads—

'That the Bill to cope with anarchical and revolutionary crime, as amended by the Council, be republished.'

"My Lord, this is the last and the final attempt that I am making to persuade Government to consider the desirability of affording the public an opportunity of expressing their opinions on the Bill, not as introduced, not as amended by the Select Committee, but as amended by the Council. It has been more than once suggested by the Hon'ble the Home Member that important modifications have been made by this Council in the Bill. So far as I am concerned, my Lord, I beg to differ. I say and I am sure you will believe me that I have very carefully compared the original Bill, the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, and the Bill as now amended by the Council. I maintain that the essential features of the Bill remain unaltered. The main principles underlying the Bill as introduced are there. However, as there is this difference of opinion between the non-official Members and the Government, namely, whether the modifications made by this Council in the Bill really amount to important modifications or not, I submit time should be allowed to the public to say what they feel and think of them. If the people are satisfied with the modifications made by this Council we shall have nothing to say. If they accept the view that my Hon'ble friend the Home Member takes of the modifications, well, we in this Council will have no reason to complain. But let the people say what they feel, what they think about these modifications.

"I need not at this stage go into the question as to the urgency or otherwise of this measure. It has been over and over again pointed out that there is really no urgency to pass this measure at this Session of the Council. You can wait and call for public opinions and then pass it if you wish in September. That being so, your Excellency, I trust Government will at least, for the sake of the non-official members, allow them time to gauge public opinion on the modifications made, to feel the pulse of the people, so that we may be in a better position to decide our attitude.

"I now come to the merits of the Bill, because I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by making two speeches, one on my amendment and another on the motion.

"My Lord, we have now reached the final stage of this extremely unpopular measure. The Government remains as unbending as ever in total disregard or, I should say, defiance of the unanimous protest of the entire Indian opinion, both inside and outside of this Council. We did our best to persuade the Government to abandon the measure or at any rate to postpone its consideration till the passing of the Reform Bill into Parliament. We failed. We did all that was possible to have some of our important amendments accepted in order to make the Bill less dangerous, less obnoxious, and thereby perhaps less unacceptable; but our appeals and our prayers fell on deaf ears. We confess we miserably failed in all our endeavours. It remains for us now in this Council to enter our most emphatic protest in the clearest possible manner against the passing of this Bill into law. In doing so, I propose to place on record once again some of my reasons in brief. I am of opinion, my Lord, that it is not within the competence of this Council to enact this law. In any case, the question is not so free from doubt as the Hon'ble the Law Member would have the Council to believe. In this connection three points arise for the consideration of this Council :—

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

“ First, section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1915, says that ‘ the Governor General in Legislative Council has not, unless expressly so authorised by Act of Parliament, power to make any law repealing or affecting any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain or Ireland, whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom. ’ Now, what is this bond of allegiance referred to in the section ? It is that the Crown protects the subject against arbitrary executive power, and that the subject is entitled to be tried according to the recognised forms of law before he is deprived of his liberty. The proposed Bill, my Lord, in Parts II and III substitutes the authority of the executive for the judiciary in respect of certain offences and thus infringes upon the fundamental liberties of the subjects of His Majesty in India, thereby repealing the unwritten laws and constitution of the United Kingdom whereon depends their allegiance to the Crown. It is a question therefore whether the Indian Legislative Council has any authority to enact this law.

“ Second, section 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915, provides that ‘ the several High Courts are Courts of Record and have such jurisdiction, original and appellate, . . . and all such powers and authority over or in relation to the administration of justice . . . as are vested in them by Letters Patent. ’ The section further states that ‘ the Letters Patent establishing or vesting jurisdiction, powers or authority in a High Court may be amended from time to time by His Majesty by further Letters Patent ’. Part I of the Bill ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court and vests it in a specially constituted tribunal. The Judges of the Indian High Courts derive their authority from the Letters Patent signed by His Majesty, and their powers could not, in my opinion, be curtailed for any reason by any enactment of the Indian Legislative Council as it is proposed to be done under this Bill.

“ Thirdly, section 32 of the Government of India Act, 1915, says :—

(a) That the Secretary of State in Council may sue and be sued by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate. (b) Every person shall have the same remedy against the Secretary of State in Council as he might have had against the East India Company if the Government of India Act, 1858, and this Act had not been passed, while section 65 (2) provides that ‘ the Governor General in Legislative Council has not, unless expressly so authorised by Act of Parliament, power to make any law repealing or affecting any Act of Parliament passed after the year 1860 and extending to British India ’.

“ The provisions of these two sections read together make it clear, my Lord, that the Indian Legislature has no power to enact a law depriving any British Indian subject of his right to sue the Secretary of State in Council in cases where such a right existed prior to 1858. And yet what do we find ? We find that clause 41 of the Bill says that ‘ no order under this Act shall be called in question in any court. ’ This view is supported by the authority of the well-known Moment's case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council confirming the judgment of the Chief Court of Burma. They held that the provisions of section 41 (b) of the Lower Burma Town and Village Lands Act (Burma Act IV of 1908) was ultra vires. The clause of the Act in question runs thus :—

‘ No Civil Court shall have jurisdiction to determine any claim to any right over land as against the Government. ’

“ The Government of India on this decision moved His Majesty's Government for a repeal of section 65 of the Act of 1858, which corresponds to section 32 of the Government of India Act, 1915, with the result that an amending Bill was introduced in the House of Lords. The Bill was referred to a Joint Committee of both Houses, and after full discussion of the pros and cons of the question, the Committee recommended the deletion of the clause in question. The discussion is very interesting, and I will not trouble the Council with the extracts already quoted by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde, but I will take this opportunity of placing before this Council

[Mr. V. J. Patel.]

a few extracts so far as they are relevant to the question which we are considering. The Chairman of the Committee was Lord Loreburn. He said :—

‘ It might be as well to state from the judicial point of view how this matter stands, when an Imperial Act of Parliament has been passed, and this law is applicable to India and the self-governing Dominions and to every corner of the British Empire, when an Imperial Act has been passed which refers to a Dominion or Colony or Dependency, then unless there is power given in the Imperial Act the local legislature cannot pass a law which is in contravention of that. The Imperial Act of Parliament is one very convenient method in the management of the affairs of the Empire, as, for instance, the Canadian Act of 1867.

‘ The Canadians came and asked for the Imperial Act of Parliament, they got it, and no local legislature in Canada can act against it. They come to the Imperial Parliament, which is always ready to meet them. In the case of India the law allowed anyone to sue the old East India Company, it was not the Crown at all, it was the Company. Act 1858, cap. 106, section 65, enacted these words.

‘ The Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue and be sued as well in India as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate and all persons and bodies politic shall and may have and take the same suits, remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable, against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company; and the property and effects hereby vested in Her Majesty for the purposes of the Government of India, or acquired for the said purposes, shall be subject and liable to the same judgments and executions as they would while vested in the said company have been liable to in respect of debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred by the said company.’

“ Therefore, that was a specific enactment, and the Privy Council apparently—I have been looking at their decision, and I now recollect it—the Privy Council quoted that, and then they said that the effect of that section was to debar the Government of India from passing any Act which could prevent a subject from suing the Secretary of State in Council in any case in which he could have similarly sued the East India Company. The origin is the principle which I have mentioned, and that was the decision, and that was the only decision. They applied it to the case of land. Then Mr. Roberts tells us about inconvenience which has arisen.

‘ Lord Islington : I should like to repeat and enforce what Mr. Roberts has said. It will place the legislatures in India in a very embarrassing position indeed unless something is done, and I want to appeal to the committee on that score; as to whether it should take the form of the wording of the proposed amendment or whether it should undergo modifications is a matter we could decide upon here; but I think the committee, after what they have heard, and in view of the position of affairs in India with regard to these thirty odd Acts which have been passed by local legislatures and in view also of the number of Acts, amounting to hundreds, before the Moment decision, which would also be open to appeal to the Privy Council, will realise the position is a very serious one, not only for the legislation which has been passed, but in view of any legislation that is to be proposed with the object of being passed in the future.

* * * * *

Chairman : Then the real point is that the local legislatures in India have passed Acts, or think that they ought to be able to pass Acts, which do interfere with the right of an individual to sue the Secretary of State?

Sir Courteney Ilbert : Which may interfere. I have a long list here. It may be convenient to have copies of this list circulated for the information of members.

* * * * *

Chairman . I think it will be very useful. It has evidently been very carefully thought out and it will enable the Committee to see how the point arises, as for example in the first case, in the Defence of India (Criminal) Act of 1915, there is a clause saying the judgment of the Commissioners shall be final and conclusive. It might be that the Commissioners would say that the Secretary of State for India had done right, and then it might be pleaded that he had been pronounced to have done right, and therefore could not be sued. That is the kind of thing you mean?

Sir Courteney Ilbert : Yes.

Chairman : It looks as if provision had to be made for that sort of thing. Very likely there are a great many others; but I think it will be desirable that the Committee should have an opportunity of seeing these instances. It is a very difficult matter. The remedy you prescribe is to enable the legislature of India to abolish altogether the right of suing the Secretary of State.

Lord Islington : Yes.

* * * * *

Sir John Jardine :

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The natives, especially in the Presidency towns, where the English law since 1726 has been in existence, with certain modifications (and the same thing applies to Rangoon and some other towns), have got very much that feeling too. Some of their titles are under a quasi-English law, and, as far as I know, they have always thought that the power given by enactments like that of 1858, which empowers the subject to sue in Courts that are beyond all suspicion, is a valuable thing for them to have; it increases the confidence of the people under our Government, and as far as I know, does no harm at all. It is irritating to a Government to lose a case and the Revenue Officers do not like it much, but that is a small thing compared with the immense matter of governing the people according to their own notions. That is a matter, so far as the policy is concerned, to be determined by the feelings—the carefully expressed feelings—of the people.

* * * * *

Lord Islington: I should like to say a word about the subject of our discussion last week, clause 2, sub-clause (d) which bars the right to sue the Secretary of State in particular cases. Since we met last week, this sub-section has been the subject of careful consideration by the India Office, both in the light of the Memorials which have come from various parts of India and England, and also in the light of the discussion that took place here last week, which clearly showed that there was a very strong feeling against the principle which is embodied in this proposal being inserted in this Bill. The India Office, therefore, have considered that perhaps the wisest plan on the whole, under all the circumstances, in view of the fact that this is regarded as a proposal of a controversial character, and as controversial matters are as far as possible to be barred during the war, is to omit this provision from the Bill. We discussed it in all its different bearings, first of all as to whether some modification might be made with a view to dealing with this difficult subject in the future without at the same time removing the proper appeal under proper circumstances. We discussed the various proposals put forward, and especially the one put forward by your Lordship; but they were so many difficulties that presented themselves even with that proposal that we felt obliged to abandon it. Then came the question of modifying it to the extent of making it retrospective, namely, confining it to the extent of making it retrospective, namely, confining it to the validating of existing legislation and on consideration we came to the conclusion that even in that case it might lead to more trouble than might at first be anticipated.

Of course, the question may crop up in the future, and then it will have to be dealt with, but probably it had better be dealt with under the circumstances by an outside measure. That is the general view of the Advisory Committee. If this commends itself to this committee, I hope I shall be able to hear of its approval."

"It was under these circumstances that the proposed amendment came to be dropped, my Lord. I have already observed that the question whether the Indian Legislature is competent to pass this measure is not free from doubt, but I would go further and say that it is certainly not a question which should have been lightly treated or summarily rejected. Indeed, the learned authors of the Rowlatt Report themselves in the concluding paragraph have expressed their doubt and made no attempt to solve this difficult question. They say 'in making suggestions for legislation, we have not considered at all whether it could be argued that such legislation is in any respect beyond the competence of the Governor General in Council. We have no authority to lay down the law on any such point and any provisional assumption as the basis of our proposals would only cause embarrassment. We have proceeded, therefore, on the basis that any suggestions of ours which it may be decided to adopt will be given effect to by some legislature competent for the purpose.'

"Having said so much about the competency of this Legislature to pass this law, I now come to the provisions of the Bill as amended by the Council.

PART I.

(1) The Executive Government is empowered to say that certain offences shall be tried by a specially constituted tribunal and not by the ordinary courts of law.

(2) In such trials, there shall be no jury.

(3) In such trials, there shall be no commitment proceedings.

(4) In such trials, certain statements otherwise inadmissible shall be admitted in evidence.

(5) In such trials, the accused person may be examined and cross-examined on oath as a witness on his own behalf.

(6) Such trials shall ordinarily be held in some place other than the usual place of sitting of the High Court on the mere certificate of the Advocate-General unsupported by any affidavit or grounds.

[Mr. V. J. Patel.]

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

(7) The tribunal is bound to accept the opinion of the Local Government that the offence is connected with a movement endangering the safety of the State and sentence the accused in spite of its belief that the offence is in no way connected with any such movement.

(8) The judgment of the tribunal is to be final and conclusive and there is to be no right of appeal or revision and no High Court is to transfer any case or issue any mandamus.

PARTS II AND III.

The provisions of these Parts stand self-condemned. Under Part II the Provincial Executive, on a notification of the Governor General in Council, is empowered to pass all or any of the following orders against any person in their jurisdiction who, in their opinion, is or has been concerned in any movement of the nature referred to in section 20.

(1) To execute a bond for a period of one year to be extended to another year if need be, that he will not commit or abet the commission of any scheduled offence.

(2) To notify his residence or change of residence to the authority specified.

(3) To remain or reside in any specified area in British India.

(4) To abstain from any act calculated to disturb the public peace or prejudicial to the public safety.

(5) To report himself to the Police at specified periods.

Under the provisions of Part III, the Provincial Executive, on a similar notification, and in certain circumstances, is empowered,

(a) to arrest without warrant any person who, in their opinion, is concerned in a scheduled offence,

(b) to confine him,

(c) to order the search of any place which in their opinion has been, is being or about to be used by any person for any purpose prejudicial to the public safety.

It is to be noted that all these orders are to be made without even the semblance of a judicial inquiry in any shape or form. As one of the non-official members of this Council, I think it was my Hon'ble friend, Dr. Sapru, very rightly remarked these provisions are nothing more and nothing less than 'undiluted coercion'. It has been suggested that there are provisions in these Parts calculated to safeguard the interests of aggrieved persons. These provisions in my humble opinion are hopelessly inadequate, and the so-called safeguards are merely illusory for the following reasons. The appointment of the investigating authority is to be made by the executive government; the investigation is to be held in camera; the person concerned is to have no right to be present at all the stages of the inquiry; the person aggrieved is to have no right to be represented by a pleader; the investigating authority is not to be bound to follow any rule of the law of evidence; the investigating authority is not to disclose to the person concerned any fact the communication of which might endanger the public safety or the safety of any individual, however material that fact may be for the purposes of his defence. No oath is to be administered to any witness; and the Local Government finally is to decide whether they should accept any conclusion of the investigating authority or not.

"My Lord, the provisions of Part IV are intended to deal with persons already under executive control under the Defence of India Act, 1915, the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation III of 1918, and the Ingress into India Ordinance of 1914 as continued in force by the Emergency Legislation Continuance Act of 1915. It is provided that every person dealt with under the Defence of India Act shall be deemed to be a person resident in an area in which a notification under section 20 is in force and the provisions of Part II shall apply to every such person accordingly, and lastly every person dealt with under the Ingress into India Ordinance is to be deemed a person resident in an area in which a notification under section 20 is in force, and the provisions of that Part shall apply to every such person accordingly. It is, therefore, clear from these provisions that the persons under executive control either under the Defence of India Act or the Ingress into India Ordinance must continue to remain under such control so long as the Executive Government considers it to be necessary, subject to a maximum period of two years, without any trial even under the provisions of the first Part of this Bill.

" My Lord, the provisions of Part V furnish the last link in the chain. They provide that no order passed under any of the provisions of the Act is to be called in question in any Court, and no suit, prosecution or other proceedings shall lie against any person for anything done or intended to be done in good faith, and thus complete the paramountcy of the executive and place the liberty of the subject entirely at its mercy. In these provisions we find the functions of the executive, the legislature and the judiciary all combined in the executive. The legislature in this country, constituted as it is, carries out the will of the executive. It is now proposed that in respect of certain offences the judiciary also must disappear and make room for the executive. Suffice it to say that the provisions are without a parallel in the legislative history of any civilised country.

" We are told, my Lord, that the measure after all is to be a temporary one to be in force for a period of three years only, and non-official members must, therefore, reconsider their attitude towards the Bill on that account. I submit that a measure which is in fact and in substance dangerous and obnoxious does not cease to be so because it is limited in duration. The question in issue between Government and non-officials is not, and has never been, whether the measure should be a permanent or a temporary one. The difference is really one of principle. There can, therefore, be no question of a change of attitude or of compromise. No Indian can, and I venture to submit, will, therefore, ever consent to this measure being placed on the Statute-book in whatever form or shape even. We believe that repression is really no remedy to eradicate revolutionary and anarchical crimes. What is the root cause of the evil? These crimes are the outcome of political and administrative stagnation which has resulted in untold miseries to the people of India. The only remedy, therefore, is to remove the standing grievances of the people which the Indian National Congress has been proclaiming year after year for the last three and thirty years. Has repression succeeded in any country? Has it succeeded in Ireland with all its Crimes Acts? Has it succeeded in our own? My Lord, we have amended the criminal law to widen the scope of the definition of sedition. We have amended the Criminal Procedure Code from time to time to meet the end in view. We have disfigured our Statute-book by placing on it the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908, the Conspiracy Act of 1913, the Press laws and the like; we tried the Prevention of Seditious Meetings Act, with what result we all know. In the Select Committee also, my Lord, we tried our best to convince the committee that the committee should recommend that the Bill should be dropped. However, I am not going into that question because your Excellency has already ruled that the Select Committee has no power to go into the principles of the Bill, but I was confident, my Lord, that in deference to the unanimous Indian opposition to the Bill, both in and outside the Council, and in view of the fact that the passage of the Bill would throw the country into a vortex of agitation unknown in the history of British India, the Select Committee would see its way to so amend the Bill as to make it less dangerous and therefore to some extent less objectionable; in that hope I confess I was grievously disappointed. No doubt the Select Committee has recommended some alterations in the Bill, but these relate to non-essentials, and I am sorry to say that not an inch of ground was yielded in respect of essentials. If at all, the Bill has been made stiffer in one essential particular, namely, that while the provisions of Part II of the Bill as introduced were applicable to movements which in the opinion of the Governor General in Council were likely to lead to the commission of offences against the State only, the said provisions as amended by the Select Committee and subsequently by this Council apply to movements likely to lead to the commission of all the scheduled offences which are, of course, much wider in scope.

[Mr. V. J. Patel ; The President.]

"My Lord, on the motion that the report of the Select Committee be taken into consideration we again suggested postponement. We were defeated by the official majority. Then we moved amendments suggesting the deletion of Parts I, II and III; we lost. We also moved amendments to make the Bill less offensive in some important particulars. The Government remained as firm as a rock. They would not and did not yield. Is it not then a legitimate question to ask whether the British rule in India is based on force or on the people's will? I submit it is due to the people that they should understand how they stand.

"I now propose to say a few words regarding the procedure adopted in connection with this Bill. Evidence on which the Rowlatt Committee based their findings have not been supplied to Members of the Council and they are asked to accept those findings as correct. The text of the Bill as introduced was, according to my information, not submitted to the Secretary of State and his sanction was obtained to the introduction of some Bill on the lines of the Rowlatt Committee recommendations. I have more than once pointed out that the Bill goes beyond those recommendations, in one very essential particular, namely, the addition of sections 124A and 153A to the Schedule. If that is so, if my view is correct, and I do not think Government will challenge it, was the sanction of the Secretary of State obtained to the addition of these two sections in the Schedule? The Rowlatt Committee recommended that the Schedule to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, might be adopted. That Schedule does not include these two sections. The Government were not in a position to give any satisfactory explanation why they have exceeded the recommendations of the Committee on this point. Persons who in the opinion of the executive government are concerned in the commission of offences under these two sections will on this Bill becoming law not be tried in courts of law but at the discretion of the executive government dealt with under Parts II and III of the Bill. It is easy to understand why these sections have been included in the Schedule in the absence of any recommendation of the Committee in that behalf, and yet we are assured in season and out of season that the measure will not be used to affect in the slightest degree constitutional political agitation. The correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State in regard to this Bill is kept back from the members of this Council on the ground that it is confidential. Apart from this there is one point of very great importance which I desire to bring to the notice of the Council. It is this. I am of opinion that the whole proceedings in connection with this Bill since and from the presentation of the so-called report of the Select Committee are invalid and illegal

His Excellency the President:—"Order, order, the Hon'ble Member has no right to dispute my ruling. My ruling was that the report of the Select Committee was both valid and complete. He has no right to challenge that decision in this Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I do so, my Lord, in support of my case that the proceedings in this Council are ultra vires."

His Excellency the President:—"You cannot dispute the ruling of the President."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"The Chairman of the Select Committee by his ruling prevented the Select Committee from discussing the principles of the Bill and considering the question of the competence of the Indian legislature to enact this law. This ruling and your Excellency's ruling about which I am not allowed to talk, in my humble opinion,

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Mr. V. J. Patel ; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.] have vitiated the whole proceedings in connection with this Bill and the Bill passed in that manner cannot have any recognition in law. To sum up, my Lord, I protest against this Bill for the following among other reasons :—

- (1) It is not within the competence of the Indian legislature to pass this Bill into law.
- (2) It casts an undeserved slur on the loyalty of 300 millions of people and amounts in fact to an indictment against the whole nation.
- (3) It substitutes the rule of the executive for that of the judiciary and thus destroys the very foundations on which British liberty rests.
- (4) It will kill all political life in the country and thus make 'ordered progress' impossible.
- (5) It will intensify and not mitigate the evil complained of. It will drive all agitation into hidden channels with the result that consequential evils will follow as surely as night follows the day.
- (6) It is utterly subversive of the order of things hitherto recognised and acted upon in all civilised countries. It is unparalleled in the legislative history of any such country.
- (7) It is being passed in defiance of the unanimous Indian opinion, both in and outside this Council.
- (8) Repression is not the remedy for eradicating anarchical and revolutionary crimes. These crimes are the outcome of political stagnation which has resulted in untold miseries to the people of this country.

Remove the root cause and anarchy will disappear.

- (9) It will plant in the minds of the people harsh memories which even time will not soften.
- (10) Stability of British rule in India depends and must depend on the peoples' will and not on force.
- (11) The Bill is being passed into law on an incomplete and invalid report of the Select Committee. All the proceedings of the Council since the presentation of such report are, therefore, invalid. Law passed in that manner would be ultra vires.

"No wonder then that under these circumstances you find some of us who care for liberty, who believe in liberty, who love liberty, are prepared to disobey laws of this character and submit to the penalty of such breaches. Passive resistance, my Lord, is the last and the only constitutional weapon of a despairing people. It is my duty to warn your Excellency's Government against the consequences of driving the peaceful and law-abiding people as the people of India are to resort to passive resistance. I do so, my Lord, in the best interests of India and the Empire."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"My Lord, I desire to congratulate the Hon'ble the Home Member on the conciliatory tone of his speech and, my Lord, it is only right and proper and in justice to myself that I should say that his attitude and that of the Hon'ble the Law Member who have borne the brunt of this controversy, that their attitude consistently with their angle of vision has been one of conciliatoriness. We have been in opposing camps, discussing, arguing, dissenting, but our views have always been treated with consideration, courtesy and attention, and if controversialists in other spheres exhibited the same temper, I feel that life and the affairs of life would wear a far more pleasant aspect than at present and the acerbities of debate would not be permitted to interfere with the sweetness and the pleasantness of our personal and social relations.

"My Lord, my Hon'ble friend has invited us, the party of moderates, to co-operate with Government in regard to this matter. That is

12-54 P.M.

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea.]

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

our creed—co-operation with the Government wherever possible, opposition where the interests of the mother-land require it. I am afraid that we are now in the latter category. However that may be, we are most anxious to co-operate with the Government in this matter. My Lord, I claim that we have always done so. My Lord, my Hon'ble friend has complained that we have no constructive policy to suggest. I venture to dissent from that view; we have a constructive policy, we have always had a constructive policy and we have pressed for its acceptance in season and out of season. It is only recently that our policy has found acceptance. The constructive policy of the Government in dealing with anarchy must be divided into two parts, namely, the policy of conciliation and the policy of repression. Which, my Lord, would you put in the forefront? I think it must be the policy of conciliation. My Lord, I think your Government is prepared at the present moment to give to that policy the pre-eminence which it deserves. Anarchism has its roots in political discontent and industrial backwardness. My Lord, you are endeavouring at the present moment to grapple with these root causes by political and industrial expansion. You have had your Industrial Commission and you are pledged to carry out its recommendations after due consideration. You have got the reform scheme which also you are pledged to carry out and the credit of your Excellency's Government is staked to that scheme. My Lord, your efforts in dealing with anarchical and revolutionary movements by this simultaneous policy have been partially crowned with success, and I venture to think that there was no more striking illustration of this fact than what appeared from the letter that was read out in this Council the other day. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda placed before you a letter from a revolutionary in the Andaman Islands and in that letter the revolutionary said 'now that responsible government has been promised and it is going to be established our occupation is gone. We must give up our revolutionary ideas and co-operate with the Government in the work of political progress and emancipation.' My Lord, therefore, so far as the conciliation of popular feeling and the removal of popular discontent are concerned, the inauguration of the reform scheme has borne golden fruits. I am sure the result of giving effect to the recommendations of the Industrial Commission will be similar. Therefore, my Lord, this policy of conciliation bids fair to be productive of splendid results. My advice, and I am sure it will be advice that will be re-echoed by everyone, is to rely upon this policy, have faith in it, persevere with it, give effect to it and abandon the other policy of repression unless and until it is absolutely proved to be necessary in the interests of public safety.' We have appealed to you and not only to your Excellency's Government but also to the Governments of India that have gone before; we have appealed to them again and again to follow a policy of conciliation. Conciliation is the sovereign remedy, as Burke says of political distempers. You have risen slowly but steadily to a conception of the soundness of this policy. Therefore in that matter I claim that we of the moderate party have been co-operating with the Government in inviting it to follow the constructive policy which the Government has now adopted. Not only that, but we have also been trying to arrange the social forces on behalf of law and order. Meetings have been held, organizations have been formed, leaflets have been published, articles have appeared in the newspapers warning the people against the danger of revolutionary movements. Therefore, my Lord, I claim that we have done our bit in helping the Government to root out anarchical and revolutionary movements. As regards repressive policy, we have never supported it. Repression has everywhere failed. That is the outstanding lesson of history. It has only been partially successful where it has been associated with conciliatory and ameliorative measures. In regard to repressive measures, our suggestion has been, and it is not now, and I desire to repeat it, you have got the Defence of India Act, you have got Regulation III of 1818. But you say they are more drastic than the Bill that you have laid before us. Be it so, perhaps you are right, but that is not your concern, my Lord. I am the person affected, the people are the persons concerned; they do not want this. They won't have this law, they prefer what you call a drastic measure. Why should you object and look at the matter from your point of view and not theirs. If I were the master of a household,—and Tacitus says that according to the Emperor Agricola the government of a household is far more difficult than the Government of an Empire—well, if I were the master of a household, and if I wanted to do good to the members of my family and if they resolutely withstood it, I would salute and salaam them and would not attempt to force it on them. If they say ‘we do not want it’ I would give it up—My Lord, I venture to submit that that ought to be or rather should have been—I am afraid now the Bill is going to be passed, that should have been your policy in this connection. We do not want this measure. Some of us recognise that it is perhaps not so drastic as the Defence of India Act or Regulation III of 1918, but still we do not want it. There is excitement, controversy, agitation, and we should rather be without it. Our advice, therefore, to the Government is that they should give up this Bill or if they cannot give it up, to suspend its operation until there is actually the occasion for putting it into use.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee.]

“ My Lord, my Hon’ble friend has referred to our want of a sense of civic responsibility, and it is an old and long-standing complaint. He says the sense of civic responsibility has not been developed in us as might have been expected. Having said this, he qualifies that observation, very tactfully I think, by adding that it was not our fault. I entirely endorse the view that the fault, if any, is not ours, but I however challenge the statement that we are wanting in a sense of civic responsibility in any degree. I think we are fully equal to the height of our civic obligations. But, my Lord, assuming for argument’s sake without admitting the fact at all, assuming for argument’s sake that there is a lack of civic responsibility, not in all, but in some sections of our community, who is responsible for it? I say that the Government is directly answerable for this result. You have been training us in our civic duties and obligations. We have sat at your feet, you have been our masters, and may I ask, is it not the greatest reflection upon British rule in India if one is to say that after a century and a half of that rule the people of India have not risen to the full height of their civic responsibilities. I think it would be the strongest indictment that can be brought against the Government of this country. You will be judged not by your great public works but by the public spirit, the patriotism, the nobler sentiments that you have been able to inspire in the public mind of India.

“ My Lord, having said all this, I desire to observe that it is my duty to oppose the Bill under a sense of overwhelming responsibility. I frankly acknowledge that the Government have made important concessions from their point of view; the Bill has been made temporary, its scope has been confined to anarchical crimes, and many modifications have been made in its provisions. But all this does not go far enough. My Lord, the Bill in its essence and character remains unaffected. Its executive complexion still overshadows every other aspect of the Bill. My Lord, the Bill as it emerged from the Select Committee and as amended and revised by this Council remains in its main features the same Bill that it was when it was originally introduced. It is in truth an executive order robed in a legislative garb; it is, to quote the words of a distinguished jurist Sir Rash Behari Ghosh, ‘a lawless law,’ it is a glorified Ordinance, with a judicial colouring sometimes thickly, sometimes thinly laid on. And, therefore, my Lord, you cannot ask us to take in any sense a share of responsibility for this measure. My Lord, responsibility and power go together. Where there is responsibility there must be power. There is none of it in this Council so far as the non-official Indian members are concerned. We have influence, but not power. We can persuade, but we cannot instruct or direct, though we hope under the Reform Scheme the foundations will have been well and truly laid for the transition from influence to power.

“ My Lord, my Hon’ble friend has referred to the number of amendments that have been moved in this Council. Amendment after amendment was moved and the vast majority of them were rejected. My Lord, I moved an amendment to the effect that the Bill be republished and referred to the local bodies, Local Governments and the High Courts for criticism. All the non-official members of this Council supported that motion. It was lost. The united voice of the Indian non-official members counted for nothing in this Council. And, my Lord, can you ask us after this to have any responsibility in connection with this matter? Technically it will be a law, but in the truest sense it will be an executive order, an Ordinance. Would it not have been far better if the Government had acknowledged it as such and assumed sole responsibility for the measure without invoking the intervention of the Legislative Council? My Lord, there were no less than 185 amendments that were moved. I have no hesitation in saying that many of them, at any rate a considerable number of them, might have been adopted without in the slightest degree altering the character of the measure or relaxing the stringency of executive authority which is a paramount feature of the Bill. My Lord, my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi in a very eloquent and masterly speech asked that the right of appeal to the High Court should be conceded against the decision of the special tribunal. That was lost. The amendment was based upon the Irish Crimes Act. There was another amendment moved to the effect that the accused should be represented by a pleader in the inquiry before the investigating authority. My Lord, there is very strong feeling on the subject. I have received numerous communications from persons affected with the law in regard to this matter. My Lord, there is a proverb current in legal circles which embodies a great truth—'A man who pleads his own case has a fool for his client'. My Lord, it was my misfortune on one occasion to have illustrated that proverb. Some 13 years ago I was hauled up before a Magistrate upon a semi-political case. That Magistrate, now an esteemed friend, sits not very far from where I am addressing your Excellency. It was a holiday and no pleader was to be had and I had to defend myself. I am not generally very nervous and I cannot say that I am unaccustomed to speak in public, but I blundered and floundered. I was convicted and the case was taken up to the High Court on appeal and the conviction was quashed. I am perfectly certain that, if I had a pleader to defend me, all this trouble and bother would have been avoided.

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee.]

"Lastly, my Lord, the Hon'ble Mr. Patel moved an amendment for the elimination of section 124-A and section 153-A. My Lord, there is a widespread impression that this Bill, when it becomes law, will cripple legitimate political activities and bring about the stagnation of public life. This may be utterly unfounded, but whether unfounded or well founded, there is that feeling. It may be a mere prejudice, a vastly exaggerated fear, but I venture to submit that it is the business of the Government to take cognisance even of a prejudice like that; I venture to think Government would have been well advised if that amendment had been accepted.

"My Lord, our objection to this measure must appeal to the instincts of all right-minded Englishmen, bred in the traditions of law and the reign of law. We object to the Bill because it exalts executive authority and supersedes the forms of judicial procedure. My Lord, Englishmen have been our preceptors; we have sat at their feet; we have learnt from them the great principles of constitutional freedom, and have been inspired by them with the love of freedom and of the rights of personal liberty. And Englishmen must not complain if they find that we, as their apt pupils, adhere to them, with resolute tenacity and seek to safeguard them against all infringement, even when initiated by Englishmen acting under the highest impulses. My Lord, I think our English rulers ought to be very proud of their handiwork and of the fact that these great constitutional principles have taken firm root in Indian soil. My Lord, the Moghul Empire lives in the great architectural monuments which are the glory of this Imperial city; the British Empire will live in another, and to my mind, a higher form. It will endure in the institutions which it is helping to build up, in the tendencies of character and temperament which it is developing, and above all in the passionate love of freedom which it has inspired in a great and ancient people. My Lord, let me say this with all the emphasis that I can command, that our opposition to this Bill is not an opposition to the government of this country. It is not dictated by any desire to embarrass the Government embarked upon a serious duty. My Lord, it is the product of that jealous, sensitive watchfulness that we feel in safeguarding the precious treasure of our constitutional rights, the noblest gift of England to India. My Lord, it has been said that our opposition to this Bill will constitute an argument against our fitness for responsible government. I am of opinion that it points to just the opposite conclusion. My Lord, the passion for freedom, as all history proclaims, is an index of the capacity for freedom. Read your own history. The history of the growth of Parliamentary institutions in England is the history of the growth and the increasing respect of Englishmen for the rights of personal liberty. From the time of the Magna Charta to the time of the Petition of Rights, it was one long drawn, protracted struggle for the protection of personal liberty, of life and property. And, my Lord, the same thing is happening here, in a different form, in different aspects, under better and higher auspices, under the guidance of Englishmen themselves. And, my Lord, what is at the root of this agitation that is going on in connection with these two Bills, and echoes of which have been heard in this Council? It is the love of constitutional freedom, the jealous regard for constitutional rights safeguarded by law. Therefore, my Lord, I feel that in opposing this Bill we are developing the qualities which Englishmen have taught us to prize, demonstrating to the world the possession of those attributes which are a guarantee for the success of representative institutions.

"My Lord, it has been said that these anarchists are only a handful, why bother yourselves with them; I think my friend to my left made that observation? I take that argument for what it is worth. If they are a handful, why then make this serious departure from the ordinary law of the land against the universal protest of the people? They are a handful, I admit, and they are diminishing in number, they were 1,200 last year, they are only 400 this year, and the number will become more and more insignificant when the reform proposals come into operation. My Lord, is it then necessary to have a law of this kind? Is it wise and expedient to have it in the face of the universal protest of a united community, of a community divided in many ways but united on this common platform of opposition to this Bill? My Lord, I do not wish to detain the Council at greater length. One final appeal I desire to make to your Excellency and that is to postpone your assent to the Bill until the time comes when it becomes actually necessary to put it into operation. My Hon'ble friend the Home Member told us the other day that the Bill would not come into operation until six months after the conclusion of peace"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I rise to a point of order. I said distinctly, when I was asked, that I would guarantee that no notification would be issued under this Act until after the conclusion of peace. I did not give the undertaking for six months after peace was declared."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"My proposition is somewhat different; it is not a question of notification but of giving assent to the Bill"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I want to make it clear that I had made no such statement as I understood the Hon'ble Member to attribute to me."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"I did not misunderstand the Hon'ble Member; I understood him unless he chooses to throw us into some confusion—my Lord, I understood him correctly, namely, that the Bill was not to come into operation until six months after the conclusion of peace. Peace has not yet been concluded. We have therefore six months or more time. My Lord, my submission is that there is no immediate necessity for putting this law on the Statute-book by your Excellency giving your assent to it. My Lord, your Excellency is the representative of the Sovereign in this matter. It is your high and exalted prerogative to veto or to give your assent to any Bill. I appeal to your Excellency to perform this regal function with kingly benignity, moderation and deference to public opinion. My Lord, I am reminded of a Hindu sovereign, who was the beau-ideal of all sovereigns for all time, and that was our Ram Chandra. He went to the forest to please his people. My Lord, we do not want you to go to the forest to please us ; but in the spirit of that act of renunciation and of deference to public opinion, may I make this appeal for your Excellency's sympathetic consideration. It would be a step—though only a small step—towards the conciliation of public mind thrown into a state of great excitement over the provisions of this Bill."

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch till 2-15 P.M.]

2-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"My Lord, now that we are at the end of this important piece of legislation, the time has come for us to express our final views. Whatever this Bill does, it does not yet forbid a man to cry that he is hurt ; and when we make our last complaints I wish, your Excellency, that you will not exercise your power meticulously and rule us to order. We may seem to exceed certain bounds. I will try as far as I can to be brief and at the same time to the point.

"In the first place, I wish to acknowledge heartily that both in Select Committee and in Council, the Members of Government who have taken part in the work of this Bill have shown our points of view as much consideration and courtesy as in their opinion was compatible with the integrity of their measure. But that done, I must say a good deal of our wishes—the best part of them—still remains mere wish. The measure has run its pre-ordained course, resistless and inexorable. We have been accused of exaggerating the harmful effects of the Bill. I beg leave to state that as the Bill came to us originally we were fully justified in expressing the alarms that were felt abroad, and it was only when in Select Committee we had persuaded the official Members to put into the Preamble and into the various sections some words clearly indicating the limited scope of the measure that the claim of the Hon'ble the Home Member to have effectually answered this criticism came to be partially fulfilled. I say 'partially' with regret.

"Let us examine one or two items. When we were considering this measure in Council the other day, it was conceded that the investigating authority under Parts II and III should be under an obligation to record in their report an express finding on the question whether the scheduled offence of which a man was accused was really connected with anarchical or revolutionary crime. We asked that a similar provision should be made in Part I, but there the Government were unmoved. By resisting this as regards Part I and by refusal to take away sections 124-A and 153-A from the Schedule, I think the Government have still laid themselves open to the criticism that the measure that is now about to be passed, whatever the intention of Government may be, may at times be used to deal with ordinary political offences as well as offences connected with anarchical or revolutionary movements. On this point, it appears to me that it was fully open to Government, without violating the integrity or the fundamental principles of their Bill, to have met us fully, and I deeply regret that they have found themselves unable to do so. Your Excellency, the experience of legislatures tells us one thing, that, after all, human affairs run more or less on an accustomed level. When contentious Bills, whether in the English Parliament or in the American Senate or in any other legislature, take shape the air is full of prognostications of catastrophe from those that oppose, while those that defend the measures in question are equally full of promises of the millennium to come. After-events, however, show that neither the prognostications nor the promises come fully true. I hope, your Excellency, that this measure will not fulfil, at all events, all the prognostications to which we have given expression in the Council. "No one will rejoice more than I if the event proves that we were unduly Cassandra-like in our prophecies of the result. But may I say, your Excellency, with all respect, that we have been unable to understand fully the psychology that underlies this measure? I have heard a lot of explanations, but it seems to me there is much to say for those who think that behind all these explanations there must be something which has not yet found expression in this Council. Your Lordship will excuse us if we refer to this aspect of the matter with a certain amount of feeling. We feel very strongly that the Bill is not now necessary, that it is not now emergent, that it is inopportune, and we believe in the strength of our belief that this cannot be unknown to Government.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Mr. Srinivasa Sastri.]

"Then, your Excellency, we believe that if it was necessary for the peace of Bengal and, therefore, of the peace of other provinces that might be affected, that if it was necessary for the peace of India, to check anarchical and revolutionary crime by a new measure, it was open to Government, having the knowledge that they have that they now keep under control nearly every one connected with this form of violence to society, with that knowledge it was open to Government to come to us with a measure confined to these people, taking power from this Council to continue the custody and the detention and the internment, perhaps the imprisonment of people whom they already hold in these ways. It was perfectly open to ask us for their leave, legislative sanction, to a measure which was confined to these people, to some others who are still at large, but who, they may have evidence to think, deserve this sort of treatment; that was open to Government. If suggestion was made, I think, although not in speeches here. It was not taken up, but a general measure causing widespread alarm has been brought before us and we are now about to finish the legislation. Is it a wonder, then, that people are asking why this anxiety on the part of Government when there is no special need, special emergent need, and when it was possible, without seeming at all events to lay their hands on ordinary political agitators when it was possible to deal with this matter, why were Government anxious to bring forward this kind of Bill? There are ingenious people who suggest all sorts of things, and it is just as well, speaking solemnly at this last hour to your Excellency's Government, that I should mention one or two things that I have often heard and not only from agitators or from chronic malcontents. I had in the London Times the other day the glimpse of a reason which might really lie at the back of this legislation. I will not say it is only conjecture. It was said when a lakh of sepoys or so that have served with distinction in the various theatres of the war are returning to India, it is necessary to have in the armoury of Government a strong measure where with they could put down, before it reaches any dimensions, the signs of incipient trouble. Another guess that has been put forward is that perhaps it is just as well that Government armed itself with this power before the peace is signed in Europe and the fate of the Turkish Empire fills the Mohammadan community, the hearts of the Mohammadan community, with dangerous discontent. Other people have said it might even be that when the reforms, as they finally come out of Parliament, are found to be shadowy, political discontent in the land may take forms which cannot be grappled with successfully unless Government have extraordinary powers. There is yet another reason which has been suggested and I must walk warily when I bring it to the notice of this Council. My Lord, a little while ago my Hon'ble friend Mr. Surendranath Banerjea made an appeal to European Members of this Council and to the European community generally, based on their past history, on the struggles through which their forefathers went before they obtained constitutional liberty. That was a noble appeal, and if I refrain from repeating that appeal it is not because I do not believe in it, but I wish for one moment to appeal to our friends on somewhat lower ground. I ask them to remember that this Bill of downright coercion is meant to deal with the people of India. It is not going to apply to them at all unless certain members thereof in the excess of their zeal for other peoples' liberty, a rather uncommon quality, unless in the excess of such a love of liberty they choose to ally themselves with the fortunes of the down-trodden people of India. Well, so secure from the evil effects of this measure it may be proper for us to appeal to their sympathy and to their chivalry, if not actually to their support. If they could not stand by us in this struggle, let them at least refrain from casting insinuations as to our loyalty; let them at least refrain from saying what they have often said both in and out that Indians who oppose this measure are not only showing their incapacity for responsible government—that is nothing—but are likewise exhibiting criminal sympathy with all forms of sedition and anarchic crime. My Lord, I make this observation with a certain amount of feeling, because I have observed that the Anglo-Indian press in so far as it may be said to voice the feelings of the Anglo-Indian community often indulges in this sort of attack which really goes to our hearts. But it is not merely irresponsible newspapers that do this. Your Excellency, I was pained beyond expression the other day to read a representation purporting to proceed from the European Association. As it stands unrebutted and unrepudiated by any leading members of the European community, I wish to read a passage from it to give the Council an idea of how people who feel aggrieved by this measure before us are likely to smart when they find that those who ought to be chivalrous at least in understanding others are departing from this simple rule of charity. I am reading from this representation. 'There is equally evidence for all who run that there exists in those circles from which most of the political agitators and nationalists of nationalist India are recruited, a large amount of sympathy for the real and deserved or imaginary sufferings of the detained. If set at liberty, the murderers and plotters, far from being estranged, would readily find dupes or allies amongst some of the organisers of what passes for public opinion in India.'

"That is adroitly worded, your Excellency, and it may escape the meshes of the fine-spun criminal law of India. But it is a foul libel on the character and methods of those who like myself stand in opposition to the Bill. Well, the European community in India, I grant, are alarmed; they have cause from their point of view to be alarmed, for no people dread known fear so much as they dread unknown fear. In the enjoyment of privileges, immunities, and let me add, certain monopolies, this community naturally dreads the coming changes. They have no idea of what may come and in their vague fears of the unknown, reach their hands out for some means or other to protect themselves from the uprising of democracy in India, and its attacks on their strongholds. This is another of the reasons which have been suggested to account for the great anxiety of the Government to forge this Bill in advance of the time when it may be needed for putting down dangerous movements. My Lord, this Bill is now coming on because, in the view which I have been for the moment explaining it is feared that it would be difficult to get a Bill of this kind accepted by any conceivable future legislature of India. While there is time take this power, take it as a stand-by in times of peril. I will not say which of these, perhaps some, perhaps all together, account for this Bill before us. Anyhow there it is. In a few moments more this Bill will be law and when the Bill is law it does not remain there, we have still the aftermath, the consequences of the law to the Government of India no less than to us. For as a poet has said in a tragic connection 'If it were done when it is done, then it were well it were done quickly'. I will not go further with this awesome passage; but the darkened page is there and unfortunately, although some of us have tried to dissuade him from the course, Mr. Gandhi has taken it up. Well I know how he will play his part, his character will be bold, blameless, perfectly white. I could only wish, your Excellency, although I trust but faintly, that those of us who also have to write on this darkened page; his followers, the Government and Government employes, we political agitators and detenus, that we could all say at the end of the business that we also wrote perfectly white."

2-41 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Malcolm Hogg :—"My Lord, during the second stage of the discussion of this Bill in this Council owing to the very large number of amendments put down and to the general circumstances of the discussion, I felt that the most profitable contribution which I could make to the proceedings was silence. But now that we have reached the last stage of the discussion of the Bill, I think it is necessary that I should state my attitude towards this Bill. I will do it as briefly as possible. When the Bill was first introduced into this Council I voted in favour of an amendment moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea. I did this not because I thought that the amendment on its merits was perfect or that it provided an ideal solution of the difficulties, but because it was the most convenient way to indicate my opinion that it was desirable that Government should make a further effort to secure for the Bill the support of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and his friends. Well, my Lord, that effort has been made and a considerable number of important amendments have been introduced into the Bill, and personally I can only regret that the effort has not been successful. When the Bill came back to the Council from the Select Committee the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea moved another amendment, the object of which was to postpone further discussion on the Bill until the September Session of Council. I listened carefully to the speeches made by the Hon'ble mover and those who supported him in favour of his amendment, but I could hear nothing in the nature of a promise that if the amendment was carried they would next September support the Bill, no undertaking that they would spend the interim in educating public opinion, no indication that the reception which this Bill would receive in September would be any different to what it was here and now. If there had been any such promise or any such undertaking I should have felt very much tempted to support that amendment, but in the absence of anything of the kind I could not see what there was to be gained by postponement. I could not help feeling that the amendment was little else than a direct negative in disguise; and I think the impression is confirmed by the speeches we have heard to-day from the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri. I therefore supported the Bill during the second stage of its progress through the Council and I support it to-day, for these reasons. I am satisfied that special measures are necessary to cope with anarchical and revolutionary crime. I am satisfied that no law-abiding citizen, whatever his political opinions and methods may be, so long as they are not criminal has anything to fear from the measure. Lastly, I am satisfied that in respect of the persons who will or may come within the purview of the Bill it does not go beyond the general recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee and that Government cannot do otherwise than accept generally the recommendations of that Committee whose qualifications for their task could scarcely have been higher. Well, as I have said, for these reasons I support the Bill, but before sitting down I must refer to one or two points arising out of the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri. Mr. Sastri told us that the explanations given hitherto for the Bill were not sufficient and that there was a good deal to be said for those people who felt that there must be some other explanation behind it. Mr. Banerjea told us this morning that it was useless passing a Bill of this nature or rather that it was unnecessary to pass a Bill of this nature because the number of anarchists and revolutionaries was happily and rapidly dwindling. My Lord, I find it very hard to understand the point of view of my two Hon'ble friends. I would ask them to remember the story revealed in the Rowlatt Report; I would ask them to remember how before the Defence of India Act was passed, the anarchical and revolutionary movement was rapidly spreading, how the minds of inflammable youths were being steadily poisoned by the doctrines of anarchy and revolution, how schools were being made into breeding grounds for future anarchists. I would ask them if they want that process repeated. If no such legislation as this is passed, what will happen? When the Defence of India Act expires, the few, I hope they will be few, the few irreconcilable anarchists will be let out to start again their nefarious processes. The serpent, my Lord, is scotched, not killed. The machinery for the propagation of anarchical ideas is still ready there to resume operations as soon as those who worked it regain their liberty, and I feel perfectly confident, that if this legislation was not passed there would be a repetition of the same process. The youth of India or of whatever part of India these anarchists selected for their operations would again be exposed to the subtle poisons of their doctrines. I would ask the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri whether that is not reason enough for this measure, and whether he wishes the minds of the rising generation of his countrymen to be subjected to what they were subjected to before the passing of the Defence of India Act.

"Then there is another point, my Lord, which arises out of the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri's speech. He read an extract from a recent representation of the European Association. I have not previously seen that representation. I have not read it in toto, and it is therefore somewhat difficult for me to say how far it does or does not represent my individual views. But he complains that that representation or a portion of that representation which he read misrepresents the point of view of many of those who are opposing this measure. Well, as I understood the sentences he read, they only suggested that among those who oppose the measure there might be some who would be easy dupes of the revolutionary party. But be that as it may, I regret that the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri was led by his feelings into a misrepresentation as gross as any he complained of. If I understood him aright, he suggested that some of those Europeans who are now supporting the Bill were really actuated by a fear of what might be the results of the impending political changes in India. My Lord, the representation he complained of, I think that no misrepresentation could be grosser than the one he was himself guilty of. I cannot see any difference between the results of any political changes which we may expect in India and legislation of this nature which is designed merely to deal with a particular small section of the community addicted to revolutionary and anarchical ideas and crimes and to protect the youth of India from their insidious doctrines and teachings."

2-51 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"My Lord, nearly everything that has to be said has been said ; every argument that we had to urge has been urged against the passing of this measure, and now on the final motion that the Bill be passed, I do not think there is really any necessity for repeating the same arguments. But at the same time, my Lord, I cannot allow myself to give a silent vote on this very vital question which affects the life and death of our political status. I am afraid, my Hon'ble friend Sir George Lowndes may say again that we were indulging in exaggerated language. But, my Lord, do believe that this Bill will to a large extent tend to the disruption of our political status. My Lord, I shall, therefore, very briefly just state my objections to this measure.

"My Lord, nothing remains now. The struggle is over. We have reached the end, and in a few moments, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sastri said, this measure will become the law of the land. We have fought to the utmost of our power against this obnoxious measure, we have fought to establish on a permanent footing, to maintain, as I said, that memorable right, to maintain the British tone of administration of justice ; but failed, failed I grieve to think owing to the organised official opposition, the opposition of men whose forefathers laid down their lives to inaugurate it. Nothing in the soul-inspiring history of your nation impresses me so much as that incident in the reign of King Henry IV when the Chief Justice sends the Prince of Wales who became later King Henry V, to jail for contempt of court. That, my Lord, is symbolical of the tone of your administration of justice. This we tried to preserve against encroachment by the descendants of the very men who established it.

"In this combat, this unequal fight, we have lost all along the line, lost heavily. How many of the 185 amendments that stood in our names have been carried, have been accepted by Government. How many or how few of these few again are material, are anything more than trivial matters. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Hogg has just now said that when he supported the motion of the Hon'ble Mr. Bauerjea on the last occasion, he hoped that concessions to us would really be appreciated but he grieved to find that although very many modifications had been introduced by the Select Committee we were as unreasonable as ever. I appeal to him to tell me what important modifications worth the name have been introduced. I appeal to him to see whether there are not still Parts II and III which authorise the executive to usurp the functions of the Judge, to punish a man without any trial, by searching his house, by arresting him without a warrant, by internment or externment him as they please, and by denying him every sort of safeguard that is usually allowed in a criminal case, by preventing him if they consider necessary from following his avocation and earning a livelihood. And does my Hon'ble friend Mr. Hogg think that he would prescribe these conditions for his own country, or even Ireland? Now, my Lord, in this unequal fight as I have already said we have failed, but yet I grieve not there are defeats which are more glorious than victories, and who can read the history of this debate impartially, read our proceedings and not feel impressed by the fact that all along right was with us and right with the Government. I do not mean indeed physical force, but the force of numbers, of opinions artificially obtained by your mandate, of the considered opinions of the English officials, as my Hon'ble friend Sir George Lowndes said the other day. You cannot say that—you have not put them to the test; you did not accept my challenge to withdraw the official whip and allow the officials to vote just as they pleased. We have therefore lost, my Lord, and I grieve not. This defeat of ours will stand out as a victory. Therefore I said, my Lord, the other day that it was better for all concerned, infinitely better for the official members, if we passed an Ordinance in your executive capacity and not passed an Act in this Council and let the world believe, that it was passed with the three opinions of this Council. I do not think anybody will be deceived by this. My Hon'ble friend Sir William Vincent considered that it was generous on my part to say that, but is there any doubt about it, my Lord, that the Act which is being passed in this Council is passed simply because you have the power to pass it, not because it represents the considered judgment of all the official members even? And, my Lord, say what you will, there can be no doubt that this measure will remain on the Statute as a permanent record of your failure. I say, my Lord, it will remain as a permanent record of the failure of the bankruptcy of British bureaucratic statesmanship. After 100 years of British rule, you confess that you are unable to govern the gentlest nation on the face of the earth by law, and you have to take recourse to a lawless law. My Lord, Lord Canning did not require such a law even in the time of the Mutiny.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

"One other remark I wish to make, my Lord, and I have done. My Hon'ble friend Sir George Lowndes said: 'The other day that we had one more argument, which really put into plain language, was the threat of agitation; that is an argument to which no reasonable Government can give way. I venture to think that it is in India exactly what the politicians choose to make it.'

"My Lord, for the present I shall not dispute this, I say this, that although I am sceptical about this, that the politicians have power to control an agitation like this under the circumstances which have been created, I accept it, and I say I am quite prepared and am very anxious to do all I can to follow the advice which is implied in the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes' observations and try to check the agitation. My Lord, I do not pretend to be a leader, I am not one, but still I say I am very anxious to do all I possibly can to check agitation. I will communicate with my constituents, address the young men in my part of the country, but I want arguments with which I may meet their objections against the policy of the Government. I confess I have failed to find any, and I shall be grateful if the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes and the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent will dictate to me the arguments that I am to use. I will take them word for word and communicate them to the public. My Lord, I say here, standing in this Council before your Excellency, that I shall follow no party, no leader, but my judgment, and if you will enable me to meet the objections of my constituents and the public, my humble services, for what they are worth, will be entirely yours. My Lord, this is not bluff not mere camouflage, but I wish to show my good faith. I wish to refer to the action which I deliberately took the other day in Simla with regard to a motion that was very much condemned in the country ; I refer to the Resolution about the contribution of £45 millions for which I voted in the teeth of the opposition of the public, in the teeth of advice and opinions of friends whom I look upon as teachers. My Lord, I thought it my duty to support that measure and to give my vote for it, and not only my vote, but to strengthen it by my speech. Why did I do it ? Was there any reward, present or prospective ? Was it the result of any compact with any Member of Government ? No, my Lord, I felt it to be my plain duty to stand by the Government during the time of war in every measure that was required for the successful prosecution of the war. Tell me in the same manner how I can meet the arguments which will be brought against the action you have taken in this matter and my Lord, my humble services will be entirely at the service of the Government. I will do my best to check the agitation, but I fear, alas, there are no arguments. I am not in the position of the Government of India who, when inconvenient questions are raised, can remain silent ; that will not do, I shall have to furnish reasons to meet the objections which the very objectionable course which has been pleased to adopt have raised. I know this measure will be passed in a few moments and I join my voice with the eloquent appeal of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea to save the country from the dangers ahead, by appeal to your Excellency withholding your assent to the Bill.

"With these words I oppose the motion that the Bill be passed."

8-4 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay :—"I am afraid I cannot add anything to the very forceful and eloquent pleas that have been put forward by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea asking your Excellency's Government to withhold your hands yet from the passing of this Bill ; but if that is not to be, and if this Bill must form part of the Statute-book of India, but as a temporary measure and to meet grave emergencies, my faith in the innate sense of British justice is not shaken thereby ; my faith in the solemn pledge of your Excellency's Government, repeated so often in the course of the debate in this Council, that the operation of this Bill will be limited to anarchical and revolutionary crimes is not displaced. My Lord, I venture to think that your Excellency's Government will not be insensible to the emphatic protest that we have lodged against the principles of the Bill and its provisions in detail.

"If reasons of State compel you to enact this harsh measure, I am confident that you will see to it that it is limited in its application to the purpose for which it was enacted and does not travel by a hair's breadth beyond it, to suppress legitimate political activities in the country as is feared. My Lord, after all everything depends upon how a particular law is administered, why it is put into motion, how its proceedings are conducted, and how its provisions are enforced. It is after all these questions which matter.

"I hope and trust that your Excellency's Government and, under your wise guidance, Local Governments will so administer this measure as to inspire confidence in the integrity of your motive and of your purpose in enacting it into law."

8-7 P.M.

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi :—"My Lord, I have given my most anxious consideration to the provisions of this Bill and their bearings on our rights as a people and on our public life, and I feel that I would not be doing justice to myself and to my constituency if I gave a silent vote opposing the passage of this Bill in this Council to-day. My Lord, there can be no doubt of the fact that it is a drastic measure, the like of which it would be difficult to find in the civilised jurisprudence of our generation. There may be times, my Lord, when even drastic laws may be wanted for the peace and security of a country. But, fortunately, we are now passing through very peaceful days and do not appear to have very troublous lays before us either. Then, my Lord, I will beg of you to remember that, though security of life and property may be one of the primary functions of the State, the security of private and individual liberty is none the less one of its fundamental duties. Whatever modifications the Select Committee may have been able to introduce in the Bill, it still remains a great menace to the liberties of the people. My Lord, I cannot understand the wisdom of the policy which has inspired this legislation on the eve of the grant of responsible government to this country. It is really very unfortunate that the Government and the people do not see eye to eye with each other on such a momentous issue as this, and, if your Lordship will permit me a bit of plain speaking, I will tell you why we look at this question from a different point of view. Under this Bill, when enacted into law, very large powers, almost amounting to a blank cheque, will be given to the police. My Lord, you are probably aware that there is a great gulf between the police and the people in this country, and for very good reasons. In all other parts of the civilised world, the police is the servant of the public. Unhappily, in this country, perhaps owing to the fact of an alien system of administration, the police has become, and still retains the reputation of, the master of the public. My Lord, when you remember the education that most of these men have, the classes of people they come from, the pay they receive, and the atmosphere and environment in which they live, you remember all these,—you cannot expect these men not to abuse the powers you put into their hands. I do not hesitate to say that nearly three-fourths of the grievances of the people against British rule are connected with the treatment they receive at the hands of the police. Under the circumstances, our people naturally dread any additional powers in the hands of this service, and I have no doubt this Council will admit that, in spite of attempts made in this Bill to save people from police highhandedness, there will still be very large powers left under it in the hands of these people. After all, the prosecutions and all executive actions based on this Bill will ultimately depend on police information, which more often than not are likely to be coloured by ignorance and dishonesty. My Lord, the bulk of our opposition to this Bill is inspired by this dread of the police. As I have said, in no other part of the world would such a Bill be wanted, or, even if passed, would be so much dreaded. I feel, therefore, compelled to join my feeble voice to the condemnation of the present Bill, and, I am sure, my Lord, you and the Council will not read my vote amiss."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi; Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru.]

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru:—"My Lord, your Lordship's name has, during the last two years, been so honourably associated with the desire to introduce reforms into this country, that I feel very sad that a measure of this drastic character, which has provoked so much agitation and so much bitterness in this country, should be passed in your Lordship's time. 3-11 P.M.

"My Lord, the last 20 years in this country have been years of great political tension, but I venture to think that never before, even during those 20 years, has there been so much political tension, so much public excitement, so much agitation, as during the last few weeks that this Bill has been before the public in this country. My Lord, from one end of the country to the other, what is it that we find at the present moment? Men of all shades of opinion, politicians of all schools, combining together to enter their emphatic protest, in unqualified language, against the passage of this Bill at a juncture like this. Well, if this is the attitude outside the Council Chamber, what do we find has been the attitude of the non-official members in this Council? Every one of us, be he a moderate, or be he a member of any other political school, has joined together to protest against this measure and earnestly to impress upon your Lordship and your Lordship's Government the unwisdom of the course which the Government are determined to pursue on this occasion. My Lord, it would be very interesting for any outsider to ask why it is that the non-official members of this Council with all their professions of sympathy with the Government, with all their readiness to co-operate with the Government, have combined to enter their protest against a measure of this character, a measure the professed object of which is to protect the country from anarchy and revolution? My Lord, it may also be asked in a similar fashion why is it that all the official members have combined together to vote for this Bill? Why is it that the Government are determined to pass this Bill in spite of the united voice of its non-official advisers? Is it that the non-official members of your Lordship's Council are devoid of common sense? Is it that they are friends of anarchy and disorder? Is it that they are afraid of doing their duty by their country at a critical juncture like this? Or is it, lastly, that all the wisdom, all the patriotism and all the foresight are gathered together on the Ministerial Benches in this Chamber?

[Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru.]

"My Lord, I venture to submit that the more one reflects upon the whole situation, the more is one inclined to the idea that it is the belief in the supremacy of the reign of law which has been established under British rule in this country which is the reason for this strength of feeling all over the country.

"My Lord, during the course of the debate we have often been reminded of what has happened on the Continent. Continental institutions, continental principles have been held up to us as an example in regard to certain provisions of the Bill, but, my Lord, every student of constitutional law and of constitutional history knows wherein it is that English law differs from Continental law. My Lord, even at the risk of citing an authority for a proposition which is absolutely superfluous, I would venture to remind the Council of what a very celebrated writer on Constitutional Law says with regard to the position in England as compared to other countries. My Lord, Professor Dicey says:—

"...if we confine our attention to the existing condition of Europe we shall find that the rule of law, even in this narrow sense is peculiar to England or to the United States of America, have inherited English traditions. In almost all Continental countries, the executive exercises far wider discretionary authority in matters of arrest, of temporary imprisonment, of expulsion from its territory and the like, than is either legally claimed or in fact exerted by the Government in England; and a study of European politics now and again reminds English readers that wherever there is discretion there is room for arbitrariness and that in a republic no less than under a monarchy discretionary authority on the part of the Government must mean insecurity for legal freedom on the part of its subjects."

"My Lord, in another passage, which is probably more apposite to the nature of the present Bill, the same learned writer says:—

"Suppose for example that a body of foreign anarchists come to England and are thought by the police on strong grounds of suspicion to be engaged in a plot, say, for blowing up the Houses of Parliament. Suppose also that the existence of the conspiracy does not admit of absolute proof. An English Minister, if he is not prepared to put the conspirators on their trial has no more arresting them or of expelling them from the country."

But, my Lord, it may very well be said 'Oh well, that may be the feeling, the consciousness in England, it is not the feeling or the consciousness in India.' May I, in all humility, venture to tell your Lordship and your Lordship's Government that if there is one thing more than another which reconciles the people of this country to British rule it is the belief and the consciousness that every man must have his due under the law. You may go from one end of the country to the other; you may go through the villages; and yet the highest tribute you will find the people of this country paying to British rule is—'This is British rule; there is the reign of law everywhere; each of us is entitled to the protection of the law.' That is the feeling, my Lord, in this country. Every one feels security in personal freedom. Everyone feels secure that if he has committed any offence, he will be tried according to law and not arrested according to the sweet will of the executive. My Lord, it is this consciousness, this belief in the supremacy of law that this measure is hurting on the present occasion. It is causing uneasiness in the public mind, that instead of following the established traditions of British rule in India, the present Bill is introducing a spirit which is wholly foreign to it and which if allowed to go on unchecked may lead us into a very dangerous position.

"My Lord, I am fully prepared to believe that no action will be taken under this Bill light-heartedly. I recognise that the Hon'ble the Home Member has times out of number, in the course of this debate, given us the assurance that this Bill is not being passed to cope with ordinary political agitation, that it is merely intended to cope with anarchists and revolutionaries in this country. I give him full credit for that assurance, and I am prepared to believe him. But, my Lord, experience in the past has been bitter. We know, as a matter of fact, that certain measures which were passed for certain definite objects have been applied to certain other measures. At any rate, that is the feeling in the country. You cannot close your eyes to that. And we know, my Lord, also from experience that the placing of such large arbitrary powers in the hands of the Government is in itself a very objectionable principle. My Lord, throughout the debate here, there has been one important omission on the part of the Government Members, and that is to convince us and the country that the present legal machinery has completely broken down. My Lord, I am not one of those who have questioned the findings of the Rowlatt Report. I did not do so in my speech, my Lord, and I still, after careful consideration of the whole situation, think that the report is based on solid evidence. I am prepared to give the Government the honesty of purpose to those learned Judges, but the acceptance of those findings of fact does not involve the necessity of accepting those recommendations. When you come to the Chapter dealing with the recommendation in the Rowlatt Report, my Lord, you fail to observe that there is no positive evidence to be found anywhere there to the effect that the present legal machinery has failed, or that the law as it stands at present cannot cope with the situation. My Lord, it has been said 'Oh well, we are passing through critical times. At critical times rate critical times may arise and then we must be fore-armed.' In the first place, my Lord, we are not fore-armed to the extent of being fore-armed in anticipation of a danger which may or may not come some time later. At any rate, the danger which you apprehend is not so obviously obvious that you should be justified or entitled to take such large and repressive powers. In the next place, my Lord, what I submit is this, that in England when critical times arise and when some strong measures are proposed to be taken and the executive is armed with certain extraordinary powers, there are ordinary legal remedies open, either at the time when a man is taken under arrest, or subsequently. Now, so far as that is concerned, the present Bill provides for no such remedies either at the time when a man is taken under arrest or put under confinement, or at any subsequent time. Let us face the situation boldly and squarely; and if we do face the situation, it seems to me that the measure is of a very extraordinary and arbitrary character. The mere fact that the Government proposes to apply it to certain persons who are undoubtedly, as everyone of us will admit, enemies of this country, is not enough to dispose of this larger issue. My Lord, I was very glad that the Hon'ble the Home Member said what we have all along been saying, that he recognised that the present measure alone could not cure the evil. My Lord, I would go a step further and say that in no part of the world have repressive measures been able to uproot any evil which has arisen in the body politic permanently. They may be a good cure for the time-being; but the disease is there, and it is liable to recrudescence."

"Well, my Lord, my Hon'ble friend, Sir William Vincent, hinted at the forthcoming reforms. I do sincerely trust and hope that the balm of reform will heal the wound. But, my Lord, whether those reforms will be up to expectations, whether they will be anything like what your Lordship has recommended, or whether they will fall short of even what your Lordship recommended—all that is on the knee of the gods. I sincerely hope and trust that it will be recognised by those responsible for the government of this country both here and in England that nothing short of a very large measure of reforms, and a fulfilment of those promises or of those pledges which have been held out to us, will reconcile the country to the situation which has grown from year to year.

" My Lord, on those grounds I must oppose this motion."

3-25 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett:—" My Lord, I should like to endeavour to reply to some of the apprehensions and anxieties of my Hon'ble non-official friends. The majority of them deplore the murders, robberies and bomb outrages committed by the revolutionary gangs as much as we do, but at the same time they oppose measures which in a stronger form than is now proposed have been proved by experience to be efficacious in preventing such crimes. This apparent inconsistency has been explained by the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah, who, I am sorry to say, is not here to-day, in words which I understand to mean this—that if the Government could spread its nets as widely as it would like to spread them, it would come into active operation it would no doubt stop revolutionary crime, or at least do so at the cost of depriving innocent persons of liberty. Mr. Jinnah also said that for the faults of a few violent revolutionaries Government would be casting a slur on the proved general loyalty of India. I would like to reply to both these arguments. As regards the first, that the active operation of the Bill would bring to you the political classes, it is hardly necessary to point out that the Bill which accused persons would, in that contingency, be subject to anarchy and anarchy would be tribunals of the highest strength and authority. This is what the Rowlatt Committee recommended. And in considering the degree of danger likely to arise from internments to be anticipated if so troublous a time comes as that for which this Bill attempts to provide, we all know that of 80 persons interned or detained as State prisoners by the Government of India in the last year in circumstances carefully investigated by the Committee, only 6 were recommended for release. The provisions of the Bill non-officials would be subject to the same rules as the State prisoners in cases of internment. It is true that particular precautions have been taken to prevent any mistakes in the future. I would like to invite the attention of Hon'ble Members to paragraphs 13 and 14 of the Beacheroff-Chandavarkar Report. The whole paper is worthy of close reading. Its clearly reasoned exposition of facts is not in the least affected by Sir Narayan Chandavarkar's subsequent letter to the Committee. It bears strongly on what the Maharaja of Kasimbazar has said about the police. It contains remarkable testimony to the nature of the work of the police in cases of revolutionary crime. I will quote two sentences: 'We are satisfied that the police have taken care to see that the confessions they have obtained are true and have been helpful. We have come across cases which show that sometimes the police have been over-cautious in that respect.' In paragraph 11 of their report the authors explain why the police have to be particularly cautious in such cases. They write: 'The temptation to which a police officer is exposed of extorting confessions, true or false, in the case of ordinary crime is very much less in the case of revolutionary crime. The risk which the police run of certain exposure is greater in the latter than in the former.' They amplify this argument by pointing out that unlike ordinary crime revolutionary crime is collective and continuous in its operation. Individual outrages do not stand by themselves and any recorded confessions are for a long period subject to the sifting process of truth. This particular point is elaborated in the third clause of paragraph 35 of the Rowlatt Report. Police work in revolutionary outrage cases is carried on not only at great personal risk, but, if in the least crooked, at great professional risk. Moreover, I would ask the Council to consider dispassionately whether Provincial Governments and their executive subordinates, magistrates and police superintendents, are really likely to recommend that this Bill be brought into active operation for any but the very gravest reasons. My own pretty long experience of executive administration makes me sure that they are not; that should the need be imperative it would be unwelcome in the highest degree. In the first place, any recommendation of action of the kind provided for will be viewed by superior authority with strong disfavour unless justified by unanswerable necessity. In the second place, should action be taken it would certainly encounter bitterly hostile criticism. In any case it would be most disagreeable and would entail heavy additional labour where there is ample labour already. The acute anxieties of my Hon'ble friends are, in my humble opinion, unjustified either by facts or probabilities. No doubt here and there, in the past, mistakes have been made, or officers have acted wrongly or Criminal Investigation Department officials have been foolish or obtrusive. This was bound to happen when they were faced with grave outbursts of an unprecedented form of crime. Officers are human beings like other people. The greatest care should always be taken to safeguard legitimate political activity from Criminal Investigation Department attentions. But the Rowlatt Committee, after detailed inquiries found remarkably few police mistakes. The long history of revolutionary crime and the Beachcroft and Navarkar Tribunal came to a similar conclusion. To take steps as there were a reason for abandoning precautions of proved efficacy against a renewal of predatory and sanguinary terrorism would be a proceeding unworthy of a sane Government.

" I pass to Mr. Jinnah's second argument, which was that this Bill, for the faults of a few hundred revolutionaries, casts a slur on the general loyalty of India. That argument has commended itself to other members. I am grateful for this opportunity of pointing out that the Report of the Committee is most careful to emphasise the general loyalty of India. The numbers and efforts of the revolutionaries in no more than proportion to the proportions. Well, my Lord, as one of the writers of the Report I can say that this consideration was directly present to our minds. I can point to strong internal evidence of the fact. I will give two instances.

" What but this was the main object of paragraph 10 which contains a brief summary of the difficult position of Indian nationalists in November 1914 and the fact that as the Committee reported in November 1914, Muslims may justly claim credit for their loyalty. The critical object was to put all the revolutionary movements in their proper proportions, and to emphasize that each had as we said 'come with the support of Indian loyalty,' even though 'in dealing with conspiracies so elusive and carefully contrived Government had been compelled to resort to extraordinary legislation.'

" That the authors of the Rowlatt Report did clearly demonstrate the general loyalty of India was noticed by our colleague Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya in his Congress Presidential Speech. He quoted part of the passage to which I have just now referred and said as follows :—

" The loyalty of the country generally was emphasised by the attempts made by very small sections of the population to create trouble. He went on to plead 'Let not the misdeeds of a small number of misguided youths be pitted against the unswerving loyalty of 300 millions of the people of India.' That is the argument put forward by the opposers of this Bill, and if your Excellency's Government in framing the Bill had been prompted by any desire or intention to put the crimes reported by the Rowlatt Committee into scales, to weigh them against the general loyalty of India during the war, and to find the loyalty wanting, the argument would be justified. But in fact neither the Rowlatt Committee nor your Excellency's Government had any such desire or intention. What the Committee intended to show and showed was simply this, how such noxious crimes had been perpetrated by the revolutionaries, how widely they had cast their nets and how difficult it had been to prevent and thwart their operations. The Committee went on to suggest measures for thwarting such operations in future, these measures your Excellency's Government felt compelled to adopt, and, in framing them has all along earnestly sought the co-operation of our non-official friends. Our friend Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea has informed us this morning that had the Government preferred to take stronger measures, had they proposed to re-enact the Defence of India Act for a further period and to use copiously the old Regulation of 1818, all would have been well. I do not think that he seriously means the Government to suppose this, or that if on the publication of the Rowlatt Committee's Report the Government had proposed to prolong the operations of the Defence of India Act, our friend would have calmly acquiesced. But to return to my main argument. What has been emphasised on the Government side in these debates has been not accusations against Indian loyalty but the desirability of saving inoffensive and loyal Indians from the predatory and criminal operations of a section of their fellow-countrymen. I have already invited attention to some of these operations, and I think that if any of the present opposition had suffered themselves from one of these enterprises, if they had lost a relative or even a large sum of money, we should not have heard the term 'Black Bill' in this Council. Mr. Jinnah questioned the accuracy of my assertion that terrorism and anarchical crime attained such success in part of Great Britain and Ireland. If they had attained recently in Bengal, they would be driven out by methods as drastic as the Bill under discussion. I repeat and emphasise my assertion. Never would the British Government or the British people, in its consideration, tolerate the existence of revolutionary outrage and terrorism in any part of their own country. As regards Ireland I am not an expert. I have visited the country only three times on short visits, but when I was there I did not observe particular similarities between the fairly homogeneous people and easy communications of a country so large or populous as many a division in some provinces of India, and the many and mixed masses and races, the enormous distances, and the defective communications of India. My Lord, I venture to ask my non-official colleagues to place some confidence in the intentions and objects of Government in undertaking and carrying through this piece of legislation. If I may venture to say so, your Lordship's Government has in this degree deserved that confidence. It has proposed a Bill of a moderate and liberal description; and even in times past the Government of India has received similar tributes from me. I think that the rule of the British Government in India is addressing the Indian people at Lucknow, and that the British Government 'while retaining the power of initiative, direction, decision, had maintained for many decades a peace and order in the land, administered even-handed justice, brought the Indian mind through a widespread system of western education into contact with the thoughts and ideals of the west, and has led to the birth of a very great and living movement for the intellectual and moral regeneration of the people.' That is not a bad record after all. Your Lordship had been Viceroy for eight months and had as is well known already devoted anxious thought to the satisfaction of Indian political ambitions. In every measure you have sought the advancement of India. On every occasion you have tried to enlist Indian co-operation. In dealing with this very prevention of revolutionary crime from the beginning you sought Indian co-operation. You appointed two Indians to the Rowlatt Committee; and if in dealing with the recommendations of that Committee your Government has had to act independently of Indian support, it has done so with keen and obvious regret. In no respect has it failed to deserve far more generous treatment in this matter than anything that it has hitherto received.

[Sir Verney Lovett.]

"My Lord, we have been told that the passing of this Bill will lead to an agitation. Agitations in this country almost invariably inflame racial feeling between peoples whose interests are really identical. They are liable to produce a long chain of consequences which must be bitterly regretted by their authors. They excite and upset uncritical youths, and have in the past started such on the disastrous road which leads to crime and ruin. The Government of India must always strongly wish to avoid agitations, but if, when it has to face indefeasible obligations to shield the rising generation from criminal influences, obligations to protect the lives and properties of its loyal servants and peaceful subjects, it were led to renounce these responsibilities through fear of consequent agitation, the future of India would be gloomy indeed. For it would tend to be dominated by the most violent and unscrupulous section of political opinion. My Lord, we have been given to understand by some of our non-official colleagues that the enactment of this Bill will mean danger to India not from anarchists and revolutionaries, but from the vagaries of Special Tribunals of High Court Judges and the petulance and over-eagerness of the executive. It seems to me that in view of the actual facts, and in view of the careful provisions of this Bill, such arguments are unworthy of their authors, for in reality, I do not say of intention, they play round the real issue. It is all very well to say that anarchical crime in India is partly political and that therefore its principal remedy is political amelioration. That argument is all the weaker because in past political amelioration and conciliation have been tried without producing any substantial effect on anarchical crime.

"How far did the Morley-Minto Reforms and the alteration of the partition of Bengal avail to stop revolutionary crime? These measures were thought well of in their day by some of my friends. Moreover, political amelioration is in prospect now, pointing the way on a scale which was thought impracticable only a few years ago. It is known to us all. But the issue before us to-day is not what form political amelioration shall take. The issue is—are we going to take effective precautions against the revival of murders, robberies and bomb outrages, or are we going to do nothing now but see if they claim more victims? The recent debate in the Local Council warns us that if we do not take the first course, we run considerable risk of a revival of these disasters. The investigations and conclusions of the Committee entirely substantiate this warning. I have already emphasised, however far off and remote such dangers may seem to some of my Hon'ble friends, there is a class of persons, mainly Indians, to which such dangers are neither far off nor remote. These are not in the least interested in speculating on the particular form of idealism which actuates the few who may feel impelled by patriotic sentiments to shoot or rob their countrymen. They are very much interested, in the practical prevention of such crimes. They are interested, this Council take note, for such prevention is the only way in which we can be followed by revolutionary crime, and it is the only way in which we can rather absolve us nor console the victims of our inaction."

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul: My Lord, I rise to oppose this motion and when I do so, let me assure your Lordship that I am fully alive to the responsibility of my position as an elected representative of the landed aristocracy, a class having a real stake in the country, and when I oppose this motion I do so in the hope that the Government may yet see its way to take back the Bill even though at this belated stage. From the time of the inception of this Bill, we the non-official members of this Council, one and all, elected as well as nominated, tried our level best to dissuade your Lordship from passing this Bill into law at every stage. But unfortunately to no avail. The Government is all powerful. The official majority is decidedly on your side. You can propose any Bill you like and get it passed in the manner you deem fit. But allow me to say that an attitude like this cannot either secure to you the co-operation of the non-official members of this Council nor the sympathy and support of the people whom you are here to govern, and I need not emphasise the fact that any measure which you insist upon enacting and enforcing against the general wish of the country, is bound to defeat its own purpose and create a wide gulf between the rulers and the ruled.

"When the Bill was introduced I sounded a note of warning against it to the effect that the Bill, inasmuch as it was intended to arm the executive with extraordinary powers in order to restrain the rights and liberties of the people, was subversive of all the accepted canons of law and justice in the civilized world, and that no nation imbued with any idea of self-respect could take the Bill lying down. I pointed out at the same time that the Bill was of an extremely drastic nature, and as such it was bound to create a widespread alarm in the country and was sure to be followed by a violent agitation, the like of which India had never witnessed before. The subsequent events which have happened since then cast the shadow of the coming events. The attitude of the official members of this honourable Council throughout the debate has not been very encouraging, and has convinced the people that the Bill is now a settled fact, and need I tell you, my Lord, what the effect of all this has been upon the minds of the people? Well, I make bold to say that it has already caused widespread dissatisfaction in the land, it has exasperated the people and if you will still persist in your present attitude, as I am afraid that you will, rest assured you will be alienating the people from yourselves completely. Violence of popular opinion is in fact growing day by day. Mahatma Gandhi, that venerable saint of India, has already taken a vow of passive resistance against this Bill. It is certainly ominous. It portends the coming storm and I earnestly appeal to your Lordship to take a timely warning and avert it.

"My Lord, as a non-official member of this Council, I along with my other colleagues did all that lay in my power to oppose the measure. As already pointed out by preceding speakers, we requested the Government to drop this Bill altogether, but the Government did not do that. We then asked the Government to withdraw the Bill and that request also was not acceded to, and we then proposed amendments after amendments but that too went to no purpose. For 185 amendments hardly more than 20 could be accepted and those too but unimportant ones. If, my Lord, the official members had already made up their minds to proceed with this Bill in spite of the united front presented by the non-official opposition in that way, was the necessity of undergoing all the formalities of a holding sittings till late at midnight and waste the time and for nothing? Was it, may I ask, for no other purpose than to exhibit to the world that you could treat with open contempt the advice given to you by the non-official members of the Council, who are the accredited representatives of the people and that they were here simply to record the decrees of the Executive? If so, my Lord, it was a serious blunder indeed. These prolonged and fruitless debates instead of allaying the feelings of the people, only serve to cause the tension to become still more acute and that the rule of law has been held all over the country to prove a failure. The people are not satisfied with the passage of this Bill into law. The verdict of the country with regard to its merits is as unanimous as it is emphatic and clear. The people regard this measure as an indictment against the Government and are convinced that it would prove to be a grave of all their future political aims and aspirations, and they do so obviously for the reason that you place them entirely at the mercy of the executive, in quite a helpless position and the honour and prestige of any man might be at stake at any moment. We are told the object of the Bill is to put down anarchical movements. That is true, my Lord. But in the case of a repressive measure of this kind, it is not so much the law, as its abuse, that the people dread so much. After all innocence and immunity from oppression are not synonymous. They are two quite different things. A man may be innocent, yet he cannot remain immune from oppression so long as a measure of this kind remains in force. I have received a copy of the protest which has already been submitted to your Excellency by the elected non-official members of the Central Provinces and Berar Legislative Council and I have been called upon by them to place it before the Council. My Lord, it reads thus: 'We, the non-official members of the Central Provinces and Berar Legislative Council, have given our most anxious and careful consideration to the Sedition Committee's Report and to the Bills to be introduced into the Supreme Legislative Council, and consider that the penal provision and preventive powers under the existing law are amply adequate to deal with such crimes as may exist, and we are clearly of opinion that the proposed measures are highly objectionable in principle and detrimental to the fundamental rights of British citizens. They are altogether uncalled for'. This is a protest, my Lord, which has been signed by all the elected non-official members of the Central Provinces and Berar Legislative Council unanimously, and it will be clear to your Excellency that with this mandate in my hand it will be quite impossible for me to associate myself with the passage of this Bill into law.

"My Lord, love of liberty is as dear and sacred to an Indian as it is to an Englishman or an American. If you have your Habeas Corpus Act in England, and if in America the right of liberty is safeguarded by the very constitution of the United States, why should we Indians not have a guarantee for our own rights and liberties and why should we not be zealous of the maintenance and protection of our own natural rights and liberties, just as other nations are? No Indian could, I say, without feelings of humiliation submit to a law which should give a death-blow to the rights and liberties of a free citizen, and I sincerely wished that the all-powerful bureaucracy could have been persuaded to take the Bill back, but I find to my great disappointment and regret that they have once more refused to listen to the public voice and have thrown aside the sound and practical suggestions made by many of us and as the last resort I have to appeal to you, my Lord, to intervene and withhold your assent from the Bill, which I am sure will be passed with the help of the majority of official votes exclusively to-day. They do not place excessive reliance upon the infallibility of the superior wisdom of the official mind, and I beg of you to bear in mind what Lord Morley, the Secretary of State for India, wrote to Lord Minto in one of his letters to the Government of India. He observed, my Lord, that 'As for the Government of India being the best judges of the right way of meeting difficulties in India it is quite clear that Asquith, Grey, Lorneburn and even the Secretary of State are less competent hands than such queer paragon as certain of your Council. And after all have these good men been so successful in knowing all about Indian life and character that we must take their word? It is not you nor I who are responsible for unrest but the over-confident and over-worked technicians who have had India in their hands for fifty years past.' To my mind the present Bill, my Lord, is but an illustration of what Lord Morley observed. Here you have an official Bill which introduces a novel departure from the constitutional procedure in the criminal law of the country. It legalises inquiry and trials in camera, does away with the benefit of the legal advice, does away with the right of cross-examination, the presentation of evidence, and it holds the right of appeal in the hands of officials in one voice against it and the public. The country is up against it. But the Government will not mind public opinion and have its own way at any cost. The public feeling is deeply stirred and widespread dissatisfaction prevails throughout the country. Who knows to what position all this might lead to, and who will be responsible for that, certainly not we but the authors of the Bill themselves. The situation, my Lord, is not only becoming serious but grave and your Lordship alone can save it.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul.]

"The Bill is not only drastic in nature but wholly unequalled for and above all quite unbritish. I do not therefore so much regret the Bill itself as I do regret, and regret painfully, the fact of the association with it of your Excellency's name for which we already possess an affectionate regard and a very great admiration, associated as it is with the noble line of reforms which India expects to have very shortly. My Lord, this measure will come and go as it must. It cannot stand very long. I for one decline to accept it as a settled fact. I have known of many a settled fact in the past which have been unsettled, and the Bill which is to be passed into law in such a great hurry and in the teeth of such a solid strong opposition from the people, is bound to defeat its own purpose and die a premature death. If at present the Government on its part is determined not to yield to the wishes of the people, the people on their part are also determined not to take the Bill lying down. Such a state of things will not and cannot continue very long and the day is sure to come when the Government will have to yield to the will of the people and the Bill repealed, but, my Lord, what is most regrettable and cannot be undone is that your name will be permanently wedded to it and that is what pains me most, and that is what your Lordship has to consider and consider very seriously. Let the reforms, you propose, come first and then if need be, let this Bill follow, but I am sure, my Lord, that that need shall never arise for such will be the soothing effect of the impending reforms. It is for this reason, my Lord, that just a decade ago when the

[Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

Government of India referred to Lord Morley the question of introducing a legislation on the lines of Irish Crimes Act here in India, Lord Morley deprecated the very idea of it, and I cannot do better than quote his own words, just to indicate what his feelings were in one of his letters addressed to Lord Minto. What he said was this:—

“As for legislating on the lines of the Irish Crimes Act, it is pure nonsense. He seems to refer to Forsters Act (not Balfours of 1887) and that was about the most egregious failure in the whole history of exceptional law. If I know anything in the world it is the record and working of Irish Coercion since 1881 and the notion in the present Parliamentary circumstances and with me of all men in the Universe as Secretary of our being a party to a new law authorising ‘detention without trial’ is really too absurd to be thought of. The venerable Regulation of 1818 has been easily swallowed and a version is a dream that a shrewd man like ‘B’ should be too wide awake to nurse in his head for a single minute. However, he evidently will not be in a hurry to set on foot an engine of repression if he can possibly help it.”

“If these words will not apply to me, my Lord, I do not know what to say. The present Bill is not only modelled on the Irish Coercion Act, but has gone much beyond and is drafted on more drastic lines, and if an attempt to enact such a measure was a pure nonsense ten years back I must say it is a still greater nonsense, rather a serious and a mischievous nonsense to-day, at this juncture when India has proved her loyalty to be above reproach, when you could afford to be more generous. If a new law authorising detention without a trial was really too absurd to be thought of a decade ago, should it not be still more absurd to be thought of to-day, is all what your Lordships has to seriously consider and I shall say no more? I hope the Bill will not be pressed to be passed into law.”

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—“My Lord, I tried to explain the position of the Government that the rule of law is the measure now before us. He has been reasonable and that they have accepted any amendment which they considered to be important. My Lord, we think that the Hon'ble the Home Member must think, and other Members of the Government must think that the Government have been reasonable, and it is a matter of regret to us to have to think that the Government have not been reasonable. We also regret that, when the Government think they have made important amendments in the Bill, we should think that the amendments are not of the importance which they would have us attach to them. One of the amendments to which the Government have agreed is the one limiting the operation of this measure to a period of three years. But the Rowlatt Committee never recommended that the proposed Bill should be a permanent measure. In paragraph 178 of their Report they said:—‘A further question may arise as to whether the whole enactment should be limited to a period of years.’ It is a matter of satisfaction that the Government have accepted the suggestion and have limited the Bill to a period of three years. But nobody could have imagined that a Bill of this character was going to be a part of the permanent Statutes.

“The second point urged has been that the Government have accepted many amendments which were urged by Members. I regret to say, my Lord, that, useful as several of these amendments are in themselves, they do not touch the principles of the Bill, do not affect its character as a drastic measure which affects the liberties and lives of the people. The Hon'ble the Home Member said that the Government was face to face with the findings of fact of the Rowlatt Committee. My Lord, I acknowledge that the Rowlatt Committee have stated the facts so far as they appeared to them with fairness and with a scrupulous desire not to put the case higher than the facts, according to their information, justified.

“I make this acknowledgment all the more gladly again—we have done so on previous occasions—particularly because of the reference made by the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett to that portion of the Rowlatt Committee's Report in which they have stated that the revolutionary movement was confined to a very small fraction of the population, and that all its plots were successfully encountered with the support of Indian loyalty. We accept these statements so far as they go, though they require to be supplemented by facts which the Rowlatt Committee have not noted. Our main differences with them arise when we come to discuss the recommendations which they have made on the basis of facts as they have found them. Now, my Lord, the history of anarchical crime, which has been given by the Rowlatt Committee, shows that it is necessary that every effort should be made to see that it is effectively kept under control and not allowed to revive. We do not here disagree. No official Member sitting here can be more earnest than any of my non-official Indian friends in desiring that revolutionary or anarchical crime shall not be allowed to revive in this country. We have sense enough to understand that no hostile attempt on the part of a few misguided youths can to any great degree affect the strength and power of the British Government. At the same time we recognise—and this is a matter of greater importance from our point of view to us—that some of our finest young men have been misled into the paths of crime by the action of some of the members of the revolutionary party. And we are anxious, not less anxious, nay, if I may say so without any offence, we are more anxious to save these young men from the paths of evil than any non-Indian can be. We acknowledge the liberal and generous desire on the part of our non-Indian subjects to save our young men from evil; but we cannot but be in a different position, for it will not be true, that our non-Indian friends can be more anxious than we Indians are for the welfare of our countrymen.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

“My Lord, we are all agreed, then, that the anarchical and revolutionary crime is to be combated and kept down; we only disagree as to the means which are needed to keep it down. The Hon'ble the Home Member admitted that the Bill is a measure of emergency, but he appealed to the authority of the Rowlatt Committee. The Rowlatt Committee is our authority, said he. We have entrusted the case to them and as they are experts, they will tell us what we should do, and we are going to stand by that advice. My Lord, with due respect for the members of the Rowlatt Committee, we are bold to say that they were not an infallible body, and that Judges are not the only persons whose opinions matter where the lives and liberties of the people are concerned. Other persons, also though they do not possess the same qualifications as Judges and administrators, are entitled to look at the matter from the point of view of the public and to press their points of view upon the consideration of Government.

“My Hon'ble friend said that the application of the Bill will be confined to special circumstances and to special persons. True. Nobody could imagine that a measure of this character would not be confined to special circumstances and special persons. We are at one with our official colleagues in desiring that where special circumstances call for special measures to be taken to deal with crime such measures should be taken; we are at one with them in desiring that when any person is guilty of complicity in revolutionary or anarchical crime he should be punished; our desire is not that persons showing that tendency should not be arrested and kept under effective control; our sole contention is, our whole anxiety has been—and it is here that we differ from our official friends—that the procedure to be adopted for achieving these objects shall be judicial procedure, which will be a safeguard against the mistakes and errors of judgment, not intentional, absolutely unintentional, but which may all the same be deadly in their effect so far as the persons affected by them are concerned. It is there we differ.

“My Lord, the Hon'ble the Home Member then departed, if I may say so without disrespect, from his ordinary duty as a Home Member and took to sermonising us, non-official Members, as to what we should do as citizens. He preached to us about our duties and responsibilities, exhorted us to come forward courageously as witnesses and jurors, and to co-operate in crushing the movement. My Lord, we are willing, absolutely willing, to co-operate with the Government in crushing the movement, but considering that there are not a few Indian Members here who have grown grey in the service of their country they may be trusted to understand their duties and responsibilities as citizens of this Empire.

"My Lord, my Hon'ble friend took credit—and I join with him in offering that credit if it may not be presumption on my part to do so—to the Government of India that they were unwilling up to the last moment to enact the Defence of India Act. I think, on the other hand, that the Hon'ble Member will be willing to give credit to Indian Members for having supported the measure

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Not the Hon'ble Member who speaks."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"My Hon'ble friend states what is not true. My Lord; I did support the measure. The other day the Hon'ble Law Member referred to the fact that I had moved 25 amendments and he implied that that meant opposing the measure. I corrected the Hon'ble the Law Member then, and I regret to have to correct the Hon'ble the Home Member who was present here on that occasion, and the simple fact. My Lord, it means that there are some people who would not be satisfied by the love a man may offer them. You must not only love them but love their dogs as well, or you would not be entitled to any credit. That is the creed of some people. My Lord, I refuse to subscribe to that creed. It was my duty while offering support to a general measure in critical times, a measure which was in many respects obnoxious to my sentiments if, in recognising the necessity, I offered my support to the measure, it was still my duty to consider the measure of what I considered to be the least evil. I am not sorry, I am not ashamed, I have moved amendments to the Defence of India Act. But the fact stands that for or losing those amendments I supported the measure. I give credit to Government for having refused to move too quickly in that matter, and I claim credit that we Indian Members recognised the situation and supported the Government.

"Now, my Lord, that period of stress and trial is over. We are now happily near the time when we hope to see peace signed, a peace that will endure, and that will secure the ends for which blood has been shed and treasure sacrificed, and not installation again of Prussian militarism in another form; my Lord, it is at this stage that this Bill has been introduced. Let us try to understand the position. What did we Indians expect would happen after the war? There was a great deal of talk of co-operation during the period of the war. Indians, my humble countrymen, went forward to fight for His Majesty in the defence of the Empire. Some of the Ruling Princes offered their personal services in the cause of the war. Every one among us, who could, contributed his own mite, either in speech or writing or in money, to the extent of his power. I do not think that anybody would have the face to say that India had not done her share in this war. Many English statesmen, and your Excellency yourself, have repeatedly acknowledged the part that India played in the war. My Lord, this comradeship in arms, this continuation in a common effort, these contributions to a common cause, gave rise to great hopes and feelings. It gave rise to feelings in the minds of English statesmen, including many members of the Civil Service here, that Indians must be treated better in the future, that the disabilities under which we labour must be removed, if not entirely at once, partly at least, but steadily, and must be removed for good. My Lord, the hopes which the people of India entertained were of a high order. Your Excellency and your noble colleague the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India laboured for several months to produce a scheme of reforms which would introduce a new order into India. We looked forward with hope and joy to the dawn of a new day.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

We expected these reforms would include the redress of long standing grievances arising out of distinctions of race and creed ; that the disabilities of race under which we Indians laboured would be removed.

“ The Special Session of the Indian National Congress that met at Bombay in August last expressed the mind of the people as to what they expected. Before dealing with the question of constitutional reforms, the Congress laid its finger on the black spots which existed on the Statute-books of India, and the Congress asked, in the first place, for a declaration of the rights of Indians to ensure that they shall enjoy the same fundamental rights and liberties which their fellow-subjects in England enjoy. One of the first Resolutions passed at the Congress ran as follows :—

“ That the Government of India shall have an undivided administrative authority in matters directly concerning the tranquillity of the country subject to the following :

“ That the Statute to be passed by Parliament shall include a declaration of the rights of the people of India as British citizens :

- (a) That all Indian subjects of His Majesty and all the subjects naturalised or resident in India are equal before the law and that there shall be no penal or administrative law in force in this country, whether substantive or emergent, of a discriminative nature ; and
- (b) That no Indian subject of His Majesty shall be liable to punishment in respect of free speech or writing or in the right of assembly or in the right of a sentence in an ordinary court of justice and as the result of a trial.
- (c) That every Indian subject shall be entitled to bear arms subject to the purchase of a license as in Great Britain, and that the right shall not be taken away save by a sentence of an ordinary Court of Justice.
- (d) That the presses shall be free and that no license or fee shall be demanded on the registration of a press or a newspaper ;
- (e) That corporal punishment shall not be inflicted on any subject under conditions applying equally to all.

“ My Lord, as a corollary to the above resolution the Congress asked, ‘ that all repressive and extra-judicial measures which exist on the Statute-book should be repealed. The Congress urged on the Government to remove from the Statute-book immediately (that is to say immediately after peace was established) the Defence of India Act, the Bengal Regulation of 1818, the Bombay and Madras Regulations of 1819 and 1827, respectively, the Press Act, the Seditious Meetings Act, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, and other similar repressive measures curtailing the liberty of the subject. It did so, my Lord, because it thought, fondly thought, that a new day was dawning upon India, that the day of doubt and distrust and dispute had passed away, and that Indians and Europeans would live hereafter in this country with greater good-will towards each other, with greater confidence in each other than had been the case in the past. It was in that spirit that the Congress urged the repeal of these enactments. It further emphasised the point in another Resolution in which it asked for the application of the principle of self-determination to India. It urged the recognition of India by the British Parliament and by the Peace Conference as one of the progressive nations to whom the principle of self-determination should be applied ; and it said that in the practical application of the principle to India the first step should be (a) the removal of all hindrances to free discussion, and therefore the immediate repeal of all laws, regulations and ordinances restricting the free discussion of public questions whether in the press, private or public meeting, or otherwise, so that the legitimate aspirations and opinions of all residents in India may be fearlessly expressed ; further, the abolition of all laws, regulations and ordinances which confer on the Executive the power to arrest, detain, intern, extern or imprison any British subject in India, outside the processes of ordinary civil or criminal law, and the assimilation of the law of sedition to that of England.

“ My Lord, these Resolutions of the Special Congress clearly show what the thinking portion of the people of India looked for and hoped for after the end of the war. My Lord, it is a sad irony of fate—it has pained the hearts of many of us—that while we asked for bread a stone has been hurled over our heads. We asked for the repeal of extra judicial and repressive measures, and we find, to our grief and misfortune, that even before peace has been signed, the Government of India have hurried to introduce a measure which is a compendium of many repressive measures, and which will make the existence of other repressive measures superfluous. The Council, and the country, have been alarmed and thrown into great excitement by finding that far from conceding or even considering the very reasonable request of the Indian National Congress, at which more than 5,000 Indians were present, the Government are hurrying through legislation of a drastic character which, as I have said, is a compendium of the many repressive measures to which I have referred before. My Lord, why should it be so? Need it be so? Must it be so? The Hon'ble the Home Member has no justification for the attitude of Government in the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee's Report. Now, my Lord, the Rowlatt Committee have been in a very bad position of Sir Oracle of days long gone by. This is not the time when the Criminal Evidence Bill was being discussed in the House of Commons in 1898; after urging the importance of referring the Bill to a Select Committee, so that the opinions of distinguished lawyers may be ascertained on the desirability or otherwise of the change which the Bill sought to introduce, Mr. Morley said:—

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

"I hope the House will not even then assent as a matter of fact to the decision of the Government. It is a question which affects our civil rights. It is a question of the utmost importance, and though I express no opinion as to the substantive merits of the question, I submit that it is a question going so deep into the roots of our social life." (The question whether an accused should be offered an opportunity of being examined on oath.)

"in a question which goes so deep into the roots of our social life, it is right that this Bill should be referred to a Select Committee, and that the ordinary steps which should be taken in such a case should be taken."

"In the present position of this country, it is a grave error to guard the Council and the Government against attaching too much weight to the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee; for I fear that the Government have been swearing too strongly and too much by the recommendations of that Committee."

"My Lord, it is our duty to carefully examine and analyse the recommendations of the Rowlatt Committee; also to examine a little more closely the findings recorded by that Committee. I have already said that with regard to the statements of facts made by them, so far as they go, I have no quarrel; but the statements, I regret to say, do not constitute a complete statement of all the circumstances which should have been taken by them into account. And here it becomes necessary for me to ask the Council's attention to the course of events which gave birth to the revolutionary and anarchical movement in this country. I referred briefly to it the other day; but it is very important that I should refer to it again in view particularly of the acid speech which the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett has made in support of the Bill, and in the course of which he referred to and emphasised the findings of the Rowlatt Committee."

"My Lord, the Rowlatt Committee was asked—

- (1) to investigate and report on the nature and extent of the criminal conspiracies connected with the revolutionary movement in India, and
- (2) to examine and consider the difficulties that have arisen in dealing with such conspiracies and to advise as to the legislation, if any, necessary to enable Government to deal effectively with them.

"Let us see what their findings are with regard to the extent—we need not discuss the nature—of the criminal conspiracies connected with the revolutionary movement in India. They have been very careful, as my Hon'ble friend on my right pointed out in his last speech, in their summary of conclusions in

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

describing the extent of such conspiracies in their proper and precise proportions. Nobody can quarrel with them. They have pointed out that in some provinces efforts to promote such conspiracy did not take root, but occasionally led to crime or disorder. They have pointed out where they did take root. They have to some extent pointed out the causes which led to their taking root. But I regret to say that the committee did not take sufficient note of certain circumstances which gave rise to revolutionary ideas and fostered them particularly in the case of Bengal. Now, my Lord, let us deal with the case of Bengal. The Rowlatt Committee have stated that the first attempt made by Barindra Kumar Ghosh in 1903 to organise a revolutionary movement totally failed. He was wholly disappointed with the response which he received to his efforts. They further state that when he renewed his efforts after 1904 he met with a greater response because 'circumstances occasioned by certain Government measures specially favoured the development of Barindra's plans.' They have pointed out that the University Bill was introduced by Lord Curzon in 1904, and was interpreted by Indians as designed to limit the rights of Indians educated in English and thus retard English advance; that the opposition to the Bill was intensely bitter, and that while the dispute was in progress the Government projected the partition of the provinces. They have further pointed out that it was the agitation that attended and followed on the latter measure that brought Indian discontent to a climax, and afforded a much desired opportunity to Barindra and his friends. They do not, I regret, in my opinion, brought out the intensity of that agitation and the strength of reason and feeling that lay behind it. They have also not brought out how the measures adopted by the Government to put down agitation against the partition were directly responsible for the birth of the revolutionary movement in Bengal. A knowledge of that is essential, my Lord, to enable a correct judgment to be arrived at. These circumstances gave rise to the movement and the remedy must be found to prevent it. Let me briefly recall a few facts. In 1903 the proposal to divide Bengal was submitted. The proposal was strongly condemned. Within a short time several hundred meetings were held to protest against it. Not only the educated classes, but the landed aristocracy of Bengal and the European Chamber of Commerce, and the 'Morning Post,' the 'Statesman,' 'Capital' and other English papers also protested against the proposal. But all protests went unheeded; the scheme was submitted to the Secretary of State and he sanctioned it. The scheme was published on the 8th July 1905. It was strongly denounced at a meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council which was held a few days afterwards. When the people found that all protests and representations were disregarded by the Government, they held a big meeting on the 17th July, and resolved that all British goods should be boycotted till the partition scheme was withdrawn. After this many open air meetings were held in Calcutta, which were attended by a large number of students. A system of picketting was started. Parties of students and school-boys commenced to parade the bazaar to dissuade customers from purchasing foreign goods. The landholders' association declared themselves in favour of the swadeshi movement and the boycott. The movement grew stronger and stronger every day. According to the 'Bengali' about fifty thousand people vowed in the presence of the Goddess at the Kalighat temple to abstain from buying foreign goods. The feelings in the schools and colleges grew steadily stronger. The Government then issued the circular known as the 'Carlyle circular' that no boys of any school or college should take any part in connection with picketting and boycotting or in anything else connected with the Swadeshi movement. The heads and teachers of institutions were informed that, unless they prevented such action being taken by their boys, their grants-in-aid and the privilege of competing for scholarships and of receiving scholarship-holders would be withdrawn, and the University asked to disaffiliate their institutions. They were also informed that the Magistrate might call on them for assistance in keeping the peace by enrolling them as special constables. The circular was bound, as an English paper observed at the time, 'to manufacture an army of martyrs.'

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

"My Lord, before the partition was actually carried out, the question was raised in the House of Commons and the Secretary of State promised to furnish Parliament with papers to enable them to form their opinion on the subject. This was taken as a promise that no further action would be taken until that had been done. But even this was not done. By another circular the police were allowed to interfere in cases where rudeness was offered to Europeans or Musalmans. Military police were brought to Dacca and Barisal and punitive police to other places. Complaints were made by the Peoples' Association to the officers of Government that these policemen indiscriminately attacked men in the streets, trespassed into houses, assaulted people, removed Bande Mataram and Swadeshi placards and labels of shopkeepers; but they were not listened to. Everywhere there were troubles with schoolboys. At Rangpur the Hindu student of a Government school left it in a body as a protest against the punishment inflicted upon some of them for having taken part in political agitation in the mufassal. But, notwithstanding all this, the determination to carry out the partition was adhered to. The 16th of October, the day fixed for giving effect to the partition, was observed as a day of mourning, both in Calcutta and in many places in the mufassal. Shops were closed; food was not cooked. A hundred thousand people walked through the streets of Calcutta bare-footed in the garb of mourning, and they assembled at a great public meeting and vowed to remain united in their opposition to the partition.

"My Lord, as that agitation was disregarded; notwithstanding all the opposition and protest the partition was carried out, and Mr. J. B. Fuller was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of East Bengal. From the moment he took office, he decided to adopt a strong attitude. Within a few days of his appointment, he published what is known as the 'Circular' in which he said 'The wish of the Government is that all persons should abstain from the use of foreign goods. Any one who compels another against his wish to buy country-made goods is guilty under the law. Though such offences are not cognisable by the police, yet it is the duty of the police to prevent such offences, and to bring the same to the notice of the authorities, because there is every likelihood of such offences leading to breaches of the peace.' Thus instructed, the police began to molest people who in their opinion were asking others to abstain from the use of foreign goods against their wish. The circular created a volume of indignation. But nothing daunted, Mr. J. B. Fuller issued another circular which is known as the 'Lyon Circular' which ran as follows: 'Gentlemen who own, manage or conduct educational institutions should be advised to discourage the students of their colleges or schools from taking part in processions or the like, and should the Principals or Head Masters of Government institutions find themselves unable to control their students or find their subordinates fail to render them due assistance in exercising a proper control, they should report the circumstances. Should the management of an aided institution refuse to accept these principles, its grant will be withdrawn. And if Mr. Fuller learns that any educational institution is a focus of political agitation or the disturbing excitement of political controversy, he will consider it expedient in the interest of the State to debar its students absolutely from Government service.' This was followed by the Bande Mataram circular by which District officers were asked to prohibit the shouting of 'Bande Mataram' in the streets. This again caused deep resentment among the people. The police also began to interfere with the freedom of Zamindars in joining Swadeshi movements, and to avoid further disturbances the Superintendent of police appointed teachers and some of the masters and managers as special constables in accordance with the order already referred to. The matter was taken up to the High Court, where the prosecution was withdrawn; but it created ill-feeling and resentment among the people. In several places boys and school masters defied the circulars. Many boys were prosecuted and some of them were flogged and sent to jail. The harsh punishment inflicted on a school boy named Sushil Kumar

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

Ghosh was held by many to have been responsible for the first bomb used in Bengal, which was evidently intended for the Magistrate who punished the boy, but killed two English ladies. Hundreds of boys were expelled from schools. The managers were compelled to dismiss school masters and scholarships were withdrawn. A question was put in this Council about the actions of the military police and about certain orders issued by the Lieutenant-Governor. But the Government of India practically refused to inquire into the serious allegations. Then, my Lord, Sir Bamfylde Fuller made a tour in Eastern Bengal, and in the course of this tour he invited people to come forward to support the Partition. Some responded to his invitation; others did not. A great deal of bad feeling was created among the two great sections of the community. There was a widespread feeling created by the action of the Lieutenant-Governor in Eastern Bengal that the Government favoured Muhammadans against the Hindus; the better classes of Muhammadans were not affected by it; but the lower classes were greatly affected and there were outrages in several localities. In December 1914 a Muhammadan gentleman of Dacca went to Calcutta to promote pro-partition agitation. During the time of his visit a riot took place in Comilla. The police refused to interfere with the rioters and the Magistrate refused to take notice of the incident. Many of the officers were in the city, but they were not in the places where the riot took place to stop it. The trouble was only stopped when a Muhammadan was shot dead on the public roads. For this three Hindus were sent up for trial and convicted by the Sessions Judge; one was sentenced to be hanged and two to be transported. The High Court quashed this conviction as against all the three men observing, in the course of their judgment, that with a view to bring the charge home important evidence had been withheld. They said that the best and the most reliable witnesses would have been the Commissioner of the Division, the Magistrate of the District, the Superintendent of Police, but that none of them had been made to appear in the witness-box of the trial. A critical examination of the evidence of the Magistrate of the District has led me to believe that Superintendent Byrne, who could have given evidence as well as many other points of importance, was purposely withheld from appearance at Comilla or the court at the trial. Within a month of this incident, another serious outbreak took place at Jamalpur. There a Muhammadan mob attacked the Hindus at a bathing festival for which large numbers of people had collected from different parts of the country. There was an idea prevailing among the people that the Government of Sir Bamfylde Fuller favoured Muhammadans against the Hindus. It is this that led the lower classes of Muhammadans to commit excesses against Hindus. A Muhammadan mob publicly announced that Government would give them protection to loot the property of Hindus and to marry their widows in the nikah form. Many Hindus left the place in a state of panic. Here also the Hindus had to use fire-arms in self-defence. There was similar trouble in several other places in Eastern Bengal. It was this state of things that led Hindu youths there to deem it necessary to arm and organise themselves for self-defence, as they found that they did not receive sufficient protection from the authorities. They betook themselves to physical culture and to learn the use of the native staff-quarter or lathis. This was advocated and encouraged by all respectable people. In a speech by one of the political leaders it was said: 'We should now return lathis for lathis'. They had not Government as their object; the movement was started in self-defence to protect themselves against attacks by the lower classes of Muhammadans from which they had not found protection from the authorities whose duty it was to protect them. Several cases came before the High Court and in one of these one of the judges said:

'It is plain beyond controversy that at or about the time to which we are referring considerable ill-feeling existed between Hindus and Muhammadans, and the evidence further points to the conclusion that in Jamalpur, and possibly in other places also, infuriated Muhammadan mobs had to some extent got beyond the effective control of the authorities entrusted with the duty of keeping the peace. There was thus a widespread panic among Hindus that they might be insulted or outraged by Muhammadans with impunity, and also a belief that the authorities were either unable or unwilling to afford them adequate protection.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; The President.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

It is not necessary for the purposes of the present case to investigate whether and how far this panic was well-founded ; nor is it pertinent to the present inquiry to determine who were to blame for the highly strained feeling between the Hindus and the Muhammadans. I am only concerned with the fact, firmly established by the evidence, that there was a widespread panic amongst the Hindus and that means of self-protection were deemed necessary by men of intelligence and respectability.

" Now, my Lord, that was the origin of the desire of young Hindus in Eastern Bengal to organise themselves for self-protection. It was this which led to the formation of societies throughout the province for the purpose of encouraging physical exercise, drill and lathi play as means of self-defence. The young men banded themselves as ' national volunteers ' ; they rendered useful services in stopping the rowdyism of the Muhammadans of the lower classes, in protecting women and children, in keeping order at fairs and festivals, etc. The work of these societies was appreciated by the public and supported by public subscription. The Government soon found reason to suspect them and declared them to be illegal. The societies were broken up. It was then that some of the young men fell into the hands of those few individuals who had revolutionary or anarchical ideas. This is how the trouble grew in Eastern Bengal. It was the Partition which was carried against the wishes of the people and the agitation against the Partition, which gave rise to activities, which were innocent at the beginning, but some of which developed or merged later into activities of a revolutionary and anarchical character. I think, my Lord, these facts should be remembered in judging of the present situation.

" I should also refer here to the part played in this connection by the police, as disclosed in some of the trials. This is another side of the shield which has to be taken into account in dealing with these questions. My Hon'ble friend has done a great deal of the good work done by the police. But at the same time, my Lord, we must not forget that the rule of law must be maintained on the part of the police. The right as shown in some of the cases which have come before the Courts have shown . . .

His Excellency the President :—" I should like to know whether the Hon'ble Member is speaking on the general motion or on Mr. Patel's amendment. If the Hon'ble Member intends to speak only once on the motion that the Bill be passed, I will not call him to order because I do not wish to take a point of order unnecessarily : but the Hon'ble Member must remember that really he is not in order. I understand, however, that he will not speak again."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" I am speaking on the motion of the Hon'ble the Home Member that the Bill be passed into law."

His Excellency the President :—" As well as on the amendment ?"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" The amendment was out of my mind ; I was not thinking of it."

" My Lord, it is well to remember what these trials have disclosed in order to judge whether the police were in any way to blame for that situation that developed in Bengal, and also to understand the apprehensions of the people from police and executive action. My Hon'ble friend Sir Verney Lovett has, I fear, failed to realise these apprehensions sufficiently. May I suggest, my Lord, that the Council might now adjourn in order that Members may have tea."

His Excellency the President :—" We are not at all impatient. The Council does not meet again till 11 o'clock to-morrow."

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya ; The President.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Mahesh Mohan Malaviya:—"I did not suggest that with reference to your Lordship. I am sorry if that was the impression you got. I suggested that probably many Members are anxious to rise for tea."

His Excellency the President:—"They can always leave the Council."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.—"Very well, it does not affect me."

"Now, my Lord, it is important that the Council should understand the reason for the apprehensions which we Indians entertain of wrong action being taken, on the reports of the Police, by the executive authority. It is important for this purpose to refer to some of the trials which took place in Eastern Bengal. In one of these trials arising out of the riot at Comilla, to which I have already referred, the High Court quashed the conviction against three men and remarked that important evidence had been kept back by the prosecution. The High Court quashed the conviction as against all the three men, observing in the course of their judgment, that with a view to bring the charge home against them, important evidence had been withheld by the prosecution; and, my Lord, - it is important to bear in mind who the three persons kept back were. They were the Commissioner of the Division, the Magistrate of the District, and the Superintendent of Police.

"I will refer to another case, and that is known as the Burah dacoity case which occurred on the 2nd June 1908. In this case the dacoits attacked a house in Burah in the small hours of the morning, proceeded with their booty to the neighbouring river, killing two men on the way, continued their course in a boat along the river in the day time, were pursued by a large force of police, and after the escape of some of the dacoits, were followed up by a detachment of villagers, injured several of them, and finally captured by Inspector [redacted] at [redacted]. After the pursuit had lasted throughout the day, the dacoits made their escape at night-fall. All the accused who were tried for this dacoity were acquitted. The Police were working under the extremely favourable conditions which are referred to showing that the dacoits were under observation of many persons including policemen. Yet when they sent up the case for trial, the High Court Special Tribunal constituted under Act XIV of 1908, rejected the testimony of the witnesses, acquitted all the accused, and said :—

‘ We have come to the conclusion that improper influences have been at work and that the evidence is tainted with that deplorable interference which so enormously increases the difficulties and anxieties of the Courts of Justice, for if the taint be present who can accurately estimate the extent? There had been much to give rise to the apprehension of this mischief, but apprehension gave way to conviction when a certain witness came into the dock.’

“The High Court further found that depositions which favoured the defence were withheld, and the identity of one of the witnesses was suppressed for some sinister purpose.

"I submit, my Lord, these are some of the circumstances which excite alarm in the minds of the people. I will refer to one other case which is known as the Midnapore case. That case particularly shows the necessity for cross-examination to test the value of confessions and of the evidence of approvers. Unfortunately, it is sometimes the case with the police that whenever an offence is committed, they try to implicate in it all persons, who in their opinion should be deprived of their liberty, and it is not surprising that sedition trials in Bengal were noted for some such attempts. In the Midnapur case 154 persons, Rajas, Zemindars, Pleaders, among them leaders of the District Bar, men of high position in society, including those who were very prominent in the constitutional agitation which was carried on against the partition, were accused of a conspiracy to murder a district officer. The Advocate-General withdrew the prosecution against all except two or three of the accused who had made confessions, and the latter were placed on their trial. They were convinced by the Sessions Judge and acquitted on appeal. The judgment of

[Sir William Vincent; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" They were convicted or convinced ? "

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :—" They were convicted. I am very thankful to my Hon'ble friend.

" They were convicted by the Sessions Judge and acquitted on appeal. The judgment of the learned Chief Justice is a terrible indictment of the system of administration of justice in British India. The man who confessed was in custody for many days. Pressure was put upon him by the Police to confess, but he refused to make any incriminating statements. His mother was persuaded to press him to follow the advice of the Police, as otherwise their properties would go and his brothers and old father would be arrested. Pressure was also put upon the father by the District Magistrate and the Police to persuade the son to confess, but he resisted it. The man was removed from the under-trial ward to a separate cell of small dimensions where he was kept in solitary confinement, a form of prison treatment which is by law strictly limited even in the case of convicts and is not in accordance with rules ; and in common with all who were kept in these condemned cells, as they are called, he was awakened every three hours. Even after such harsh treatment he held out. Then the threat was really carried out. His father, an old Government servant who had retired on pension, was arrested, according to the words of the District Magistrate himself, ' at my suggestion. ' His son wept when he found that his father was arrested. The Chief Justice found, and it is difficult to say what else he could find, that the arrest was a move towards getting from the accused the statement he had hitherto withheld. After that he soon confessed. The confession was recorded by a Magistrate in the presence of the District Magistrate at whose house he was arrested. The latter intervened actively in suggesting and suggesting questions on the extreme, of documents and information with which he had been previously furnished and which were withheld from the accused. The confession was disbelieved and the man was acquitted on appeal. The informer put forward by the prosecution in the original proceedings was tried and sentenced for perjury. The defence in this case also contended that the finding of the bomb in the house in which the accused was staying was due to the Police placing the bomb there. The Chief Justice remarked that the evidence did not enable the Court to form a pronounced theory, but he was not prepared to set aside the contention of the defence in view of the methods pursued in the case. This was on the 2nd June 1909. There was a civil suit which brought no redress.

" My Lord, other cases may be cited from the Reports like the Howrah Gang case in which the High Court found, among other matters, that Police pressure had been exercised to secure confessions, false statements by approvers and other kinds of false evidence ; and that they had kept back statements made to them under the plea, not believed, that they had disappeared. But I shall refer to only one more case.

" This was a case in 1914, just before the Defence of India Act came into operation in which a police officer was killed by a bomb explosion. Two other police officers and another person were severely wounded or injured. The prosecution case was that one of the accused actually threw the bombs. Two of the Judges were convinced of the absolute innocence of the accused ; a third Judge said : ' My deliberate conclusion is that the endeavour made to establish a connection between the innocent lad and a dastardly crime by means of evidence tainted in a large manner by manifest untruth and manufactured incidents has been completely unsuccessful. '

" My Lord, it is difficult on reading the judgment of the Chief Justice to avoid the inference that the Police to defeat the probable allegation that the pistol had been placed where it was found, endeavoured by false evidence to establish the contention that the weapon was not discovered until a responsible European officer was present. In many respects the Judges found that the story given by the witnesses was false.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

"The nature of the evidence often relied on to prove seditious intent is remarkable—association in school, games, sports, lathi exercises in public, wore a sinister aspect. Kindly acts were brought up against an accused. The Chief Justice observed in one case :—

"It would have been a misfortune if this argument had possessed the force claimed for it, for I can imagine nothing more deplorable than that young men should be driven into churlishness through the fear that their kindly deeds may rise up in judgment against them."

"My Lord, I regret to find that there is no reference to this deplorable feature of what is usually called Police evidence in the Report of the Sedition Committee. So far as they are concerned, the Report of the Police Commission, under the presidency of a Civilian who was once the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and these judgments need not have been written. They do not find that conditions have changed or that there have been improvements of such a character in the personnel of the Police that the Commission's observations do not apply. On the other hand, the judgments of eminent judges leave the uncomfortable impression that the police evidence continues to be untrustworthy.

"Now, my Lord, I draw the attention of the Council to these facts, these painful facts, in order to show that there is justification for the apprehensions of the public that the legislation which is proposed to pass into law if put into operation, will expose the people, in the circumstances existing in this country, to very great danger. None of us wants that a man who is really guilty should escape punishment, but we are all anxious that the innocent should not suffer. It is for this reason that we are offering all this opposition to the Bill; it is for this reason that we are still attempting to persuade the Government to look at the matter from the point of view of the people of the innocent men who may be involved.

"Now, my Lord, let me summarise the position as regards Bengal. There was no revolutionary crime in Bengal before the Partition. The Partition, owing to the agitation against the measures adopted by the people against repressive measures were adopted. The Partition and these measures combined created an intense feeling against the Government, and that drove some young men to join anarchical and revolutionary movements.

"My Lord, I submit with confidence that if Lord Curzon did not unfortunately leave the country at the time he did, if he had remained in the country after the Partition, it is possible, it is probable that being the able and strong-minded man he was, he would have put his foot down early upon the unwise repressive measures which followed the partition of Bengal, and might have forbidden at an early stage the many foolish measures of repression which were adopted in East Bengal and might have saved the situation. Judging from the fact that he had the strength to punish a British soldier for an outrage, one may well think that if he had stayed on in the country, he would not have allowed repressive measures to be adopted to put down the agitation against the Partition. His successor naturally required greater time and felt greater delicacy in dealing with the situation. When Mr. Fuller took charge of the office of Lieutenant-Governor, he began to issue circular after circular which added fuel to the fire of excitement which the Partition had created. The attitude he took up of pitting the Muhammadans against the Hindus and touring through Eastern Bengal and giving people the impression that everybody who opposed the Partition and supported the swadeshi movement would be severely dealt with added fuel to the fire. The result was not only that there was intense excitement among the young men, but also that some outrages took place on the part of the lower classes of Muhammadans, which drove some of the young men among Hindus to organise themselves for self-defence. It was in this condition of things that revolutionary ideas found a suitable soil in Bengal. It was these incidents, the mistakes of the Government, that converted the soil of Bengal which was unsuitable to the growth of revolutionary ideas in 1903, into a soil favourable for the growth of such ideas. These events have a great lesson for the Government and the people. Here again to-day the Government is carrying a legislative enactment through in the teeth of the opposition of the people. Their opposition both in this Council and outside the Council has been strong and unanimous. But the Government are not prepared to show deference to that opposition. As one of my friends has said before this, we do not know what the aftermath will be, what the evil effects of a measure like the one before us being passed in the teeth of this opposition of the people will be. In this connection, and before I leave this point, I should also like to say that we should remember the character of the young men who were drawn into revolutionary and anarchical crimes in Bengal. The Rowlatt Committee have themselves stated that these were young men of the bhadralog class. They did not belong to the criminal class. It was the special circumstance which arose out of the partition of Bengal and its after-effects which drove them into criminal ways. If therefore the Government will rely again too much upon repression, they will rely upon what in the past aggravated the evil it was meant to cure.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

"It has been said by more than one of my official friends that the Defence of India Act has proved to be an effective measure, and it is for this reason that the Government want to continue to have the powers which that Act gives them. Now, my Lord, there is no doubt that the Defence of India Act has proved to be an effective measure. It is a matter of sincere satisfaction that crime has been put down. But we must remember the circumstances under which the crime arose as well as the circumstances in which crime was put down. To the revolutionary and anarchical tendencies which had developed in Bengal owing to special circumstances, the war gave a special stimulus. But the war is over and we are now living in happier times. The effect of the victory of the Allies must be allowed to bear fruit, to produce its natural and inevitable result. My Lord, our objections against the Bill divide themselves into three classes. Our first objection, as has been again and again pointed out, is that no such legislation is needed. The Government have already under the Defence of India Act Rules power of the same character, in fact more drastic power, than what is proposed in the Bill. The Government have power under Act XIV of 1908 similar to the power they propose to take under Part I of this Bill. Why this duplication, why this triplication of powers? It has been said that when the war ends, the Government should be in a position to exercise the same powers which it has under the Defence of India Act. Why will not Government wait and see the effects of these several years of war and of the months that will intervene until the expiration of the Defence of India Act? Have you any reason to think that the young men who have been interned under that Act have not been influenced by the trend of events? You have already released two-thirds of the men who were interned. You are going to release more and more from day to day. Why have you released them? It is only because you found that the young men had changed; their ways and thoughts have altered, and there is not the same apprehension from them that there was when you interned them. That being so, there is no reason for you to think that this good process will not continue, and that the young men will not come under better and better influences? The Hon'ble the Home Member took credit that the Government were doing all that they could to reclaim these young men. I am glad they are making those efforts. I hope they will persevere in those efforts and redouble them. If you are adopting measures to reclaim these young men, and save them from falling into the path of wickedness, what reason have you to think that your efforts will not be successful. There is no proposal in this Council that you should let them go at once. Without the Bill before us you are exercising the powers you have under the Defence of India Act. Let there be an earnest endeavour to reclaim the young men during the months that follow, ask for co-operation from all the leading men from Bengal, of whom you have so many here in this Council, in reclaiming these young men in the months that lie before you. Let it be explained to them that things have altered and are going to alter in a larger way than they expected, and I venture to say that your efforts will not be fruitless. But suppose these efforts fail, suppose in the case of some of these young men the efforts fail, well then you can proceed against them under Regulation III of 1818.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.] [Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

"My friend the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett said he was rather surprised that several Members should have suggested that the Government might continue to exercise their powers under the Defence of India Act, that it might even be extended, if need be beyond the period of six months after the war, and that the Government might, if necessary, act under the powers which Regulation III of 1818 conferred upon them. My Lord, the meaning of that suggestion is, that we had the Defence of India Act Rules for the period of the war. It is not that we desire them to be continued, nor is it that we desire Regulation III of 1818 to be used. But what we feel is, that this is a special emergency measure, that must come to an end in a certain period of time, and if it was necessary, to extend it for a few months. The evil is known and it will effect, by the very hypothesis of the case, only those men who are at present interned under the Defence of India Act Rules. If there should be any need for the extension of the Defence of India Act Rules to deal in this drastic manner with any individuals, then you have the powers under Regulation III of 1818. You cannot deal with a vast number of men under that Regulation, and that Act, and there is no need, we hope there will be no need, to deal with a large number of men under that Regulation. That is the reason for the suggestion that the Government should exercise the power it possesses under the Defence of India Act Rules and Regulation III of 1818 for dealing with the situation. Our objection to the proposed Bill is of three kinds.

"In the first place then we object that the legislation is unnecessary. In the second place, we object to the substance of the legislation. In the third place, we submit that the proposed law is excessive and unnecessarily drastic.

"My friend, the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett, showed great anxiety that revolutionary and anarchical crime should not revive. We share that anxiety with him; we honour him for having that anxiety; we, in the United Provinces, know that he is absolutely honest in his purpose and his convictions, and we respect him for it. We agree with him in his desire that revolutionary and anarchical crime shall cease whatever evils may be necessary to make it so. But where we disagree with him is in the adoption of the particular legislation which is before the Council. And here, my Lord, I want to draw attention to one other point. What is this proposed legislation? It is not legislation of a permanent character. The Government have recognised the wisdom of limiting it to a period of three years, and my Hon'ble friend has concurred in that decision, so far as I can judge from his attitude. It is not a Statute which will live for ever on the Statute-book. It means this that, in the opinion of the Government, and in the opinion of my Hon'ble friend, a drastic repressive legislation is needed for a certain period of time, namely, a period of three years. As the Defence of India Act is still in force, that period must be reduced by the time which will expire between this Bill becoming law and the expiration of six months after the end of the war. Therefore, the proposed legislation is to continue in effect for, say, two years and a half or about that, or it may be for full three years. Now, my Lord, my friend and the Government are anxious that this legislation should be passed for a period of three years, or about that time. They want it because they think that during the next three years some of the young men who are at present restrained under the Defence of India Act Rules may still require to be kept under control. And what is the nature of the restraint which they impose? It is a restraint which does not differ very much from the restraint to which they would be subjected under the existing law. It differs only in some respects from the restraint which is imposed under the existing law. The difference will be only in the method by which the restraint will be imposed. Our differences relate not so much to the nature of the restraint which may be imposed on any individual, but to the method by which it is to be determined that that restraint shall be imposed. So also with regard to Part I, our disagreement with the Government arises not on the point that a man who is guilty of any revolutionary or anarchical crime shall be tried and punished, but as to the method by which the guilt and the punishment shall be determined. The Government want that the punishment should be inflicted in the case of such individuals by the special procedure which they provide in Part I of the Bill. We point out that in the first place you have that special procedure already provided in the existing law, No. XIV of 1908. And in the second place, we point out the defects of that enactment, and we urge that even if you think it is necessary to enact that law again you are going too far; you are going beyond what is necessary even to meet your professed object. We have not heard a single answer, my Lord, in this Council to the many earnest appeals which have been made in support of the amendment that, where one of the three Judges who are to decide a case, is doubtful about the guilt of the accused, the accused should have the benefit of that doubt. I have not heard a single argument advanced which would justify the view which the Government have taken up, the very strange, the very sad, view which the Government have taken up, that where one of the three High Court Judges appointed to deal with an accused person is clearly convinced that the accused is not guilty, the man must yet be convicted, sentenced and punished according to the view of the remaining two. I have not, I submit, heard a single reason advanced in support of that view. So also in the matter of an appeal, we have not heard one argument advanced which would justify this excessive desire of the Government to secure a speedy trial. There has been no answer to the fact that a man being hanged by two months earlier or by two months later, may be a wrong for which there will be no remedy, may be a sin which will rest upon the Government and those who support it if the man should be innocent. We have heard no argument advanced on that head.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

" My Lord, we have fought hard against another provision which has been introduced into the Bill, namely, the liberty to an accused to be examined on oath. We have urged that, that provision should not be introduced in India in the present circumstances and in the Bill before us. There was a great deal of heat shown by one of the official Members in discussing that measure. Now, my Lord, I regret to think that my friend the Hon'ble the Law Member does not realise the intensity of our feeling on that question. He did not seem to realise that it is in the interests of the innocent alone that we are anxious that this provision should not be introduced into this law. The Hon'ble Member referred to the quotations I had made from certain debates in Parliament, and he accused me of not having put both sides of the case. As I pointed out the other day in the quotation which I read from Mr. Morley's speech, both sides of the case were very fairly brought out. It was not necessary for me to quote all the opinions which had been expressed upon the subject. I myself made it clear that that opinion in England was still somewhat divided at the time that the measure was passed in 1898; but that the experience of the last 20 years had satisfied English lawyers that it was a beneficent and humane change. I only wish to point out to your Lordship how difficult it is for my friend to realise our exact position unless he would look at it carefully and cautiously. I just want to read another passage from the debates which will show that what I said that day was right. The quotation that I made from Mr. Morley's speech the other day was taken from the debate of 1888. To-day I draw attention to a quotation from the debate held on the 25th of April 1898 on the Criminal Evidence Bill. Said Mr. Morley :—

' I have listened very carefully to nearly all the speeches to-night. Before the Session began the subject interested me, and I took the opportunity of gathering the opinions of legal authorities in Ireland and in this country, and I am bound to say that though I should certainly be rash to commit myself to the proposition that the principle of the Bill is not a humane and beneficent change, I have heard quite enough and read enough to satisfy me that this House and the House of Lords have not had a full opportunity of testing all the evidence which is to be given on this important subject. This is a matter which I should hope will never affect, personally, Members of this House, but all changes affecting the criminal law are changes which this House ought to regard with the utmost jealousy. The Hon'ble Member for Warwick and Leamington put the case in a way which ought to weigh greatly with the House. He said that all of us are more or less educated persons, more or less able to take care of ourselves in cross-examination, but this is a change which will not affect, speaking generally, persons in our position, but humble and illiterate persons. Now, Sir, I have no desire to resist the Second Reading of the Bill, but the real point to-night is whether this House has had an opportunity of so testing authoritative opinion on this most difficult and important subject as to justify us in passing it. When we have the right honourable Gentleman the Member for Plymouth, who speaks with such great authority, on the one side, and the late Attorney-General on the other—men of great authority and experience, giving entirely different views—I submit that it is a fair thing to accept the solution—and it is the only solution which will induce me to vote for the Second Reading—that it shall be referred to a Select Committee after the Second Reading, where the House will have an opportunity of hearing judges, counsel of various degree, and other persons competent to speak—for example, men like Sir George Lewis. I hope the House will not even then assent as a matter of course to the decision of lawyers. It is a question which affects our civil rights; it is a question of the utmost importance; and though I express no opinion as to the substantial merits of the question, I do submit that in a question going so deep into the roots of our social life it is right that this House should not make a change in the criminal law without taking the ordinary steps which are always taken in a measure of this important character.

“In the case of a measure of far less importance than this, no Ministry would dream of pressing it. They might introduce it, but they would not dream of pressing it on the House in the face of a body of adverse opinion such as we have evidenced to-night.”

“Now, my Lord, that, I suppose, will effectively satisfy the Hon’ble the Law Member that my statement was correct and that his criticism of it was not proper.

“My Lord, there is another matter to which I may refer in this connection. I made a reference to the case of Ireland because it gave support to my contention that the proposed change should not be introduced in the present circumstances of India. I was told that what happened in 1888 or 1898 was no guide to the feelings of the Irish people now. That may be so; I do not know, but I believe that it is a fact that this provision of law has not been extended to Ireland, up to this date. That should be a sufficient answer to my Hon’ble friend.

“Now, I refer to these facts, my Lord, to show that there has not been that careful examination of the very drastic proposals contained in this Bill which this Council ought to insist upon before a measure of this character is passed into law. As there has not been that examination, I oppose the motion that the Bill be passed into law.

“My Lord, as regards Parts II and III, our objections have been so eloquently and repeatedly expressed that I will not detain the Council long about them. Briefly put, the substitution of executive authority for judicial authority is a very vital matter to us and to those in whom we are concerned. We therefore offer our strongest resistance to this substitution. Now, my Lord, there is only one criticism to which I shall attempt an answer in connection with this matter. It has been said by my official friends that they have found that the Defence of India Rules have been very efficacious in putting down men who were inclined towards revolutionary or anarchical ways, and that is why they want that that power should be continued in their hands. My Lord, it is important to note what difference our proposals would make in the exercise of those powers by Government. I pointed out the other day that before proceeding against any individual, the Local Government must have some information against him. My Hon’ble friend on my right (Sir Verney Lovett) reminded us to-day that out of 806 men who had been interned in Bengal, Sir Narayan Chandavarkar and Mr. Justice Beachcroft had found that there had been no mistake made in the case of 800 persons. Now, if the Government can obtain such evidence in so large a number of cases as has satisfied two Judges of the character of Sir Narayan Chandavarkar and Mr. Justice Beachcroft, I should like to know what prevents the Government from putting that evidence before a Magistrate for a judicial investigation. I should like to know why the Government hesitates to put that evidence before one of its own Magistrates and to let him try the matter in a judicial way, as he can try it under the existing provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Why do the Government want to take away a case like that from the cognisance of a Magistrate, and to entrust it to a non-judicial investigating authority? I have not found any satisfactory answer to that. My Lord, it may be said that before the investigating authority the rules of evidence, as laid down in the Evidence Act, would not apply. Well, that is a point which justifies our opposition to the proposal. We do not see why the rules of evidence should be departed from in a case where a man's life or liberty may be concerned. We see no reason therefore up to this time why this executive authority should be substituted in the place of judicial authority; and, my Lord, we apprehend that the power given to executive authority may be misused. I quite agree with my Hon'ble friend on my right (Sir Verney Lovett) that the Government will take every care that they should not be so misused. But we cannot ignore the fact—a fact which we have found to our regret—that several Local Governments have misused the powers which were given to them under the Defence of India Act. We cannot get over that; and we apprehend that in times of excitement Local Governments may again in future misuse the powers which they will possess under this Act.

"I will refer to one matter. My Hon'ble friend in the course of his observations said that agitation in this country often gives rise to racial feelings. Now, my Lord, I do not see why agitation should often give rise to racial feelings"

The Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett:—"I said 'inflames racial feelings'."

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"Very well, inflames racial feelings. I do not see why agitation should inflame racial feelings. In some matters it may. It all depends upon the nature of the agitation. But it is an unfortunate fact that the war has not rung out the pride of place and food. It is an unfortunate fact that we in this country have not yet come to the position where we could feel that you and we are equal subjects of the King and where all racial distinctions should be a matter of the past. But I hope that the Government will work towards that end. If they will so far as politics are concerned, there should in future be little occasion to inflame racial feeling between the European community and the Indian community. As regards the other communities, there is every sign to show that in the great body of the people feelings are better and are improving, and I hope there will be less and less heard of disturbances of peace between other communities in the future. Now I do not know that there is another member of the Indian Civil Service more honest than my Hon'ble friend to my right (Sir Verney Lovett); and I feel sure that he honestly takes the view that agitation may inflame racial feeling. As he takes that view, it is not improbable that another man in office, another member of the same Service, may take the same view, and while the one may exercise a great deal of restraint upon himself in coming to a conclusion, the other may not, but may rush to the conclusion that the discussion of political questions which excite feelings among Europeans and Indians may be likely to foment anarchical and revolutionary crime, if any such crime exists, or is supposed to exist in any part of the Province. The apprehension is not baseless that the executive authority may take a stronger view of the connection of agitation with anarchical crimes when such crimes prevail in the province than my Hon'ble friend thinks. For these reasons we are anxious that all decisions, affecting the life or liberty of a fellow-man, should be judicial decisions. That is our whole objection to Parts II and III of the Bill.

"My Lord, I will not take up more time. I submit with very great respect that it is not wise for the Government to disregard the sentiments of the people over whom Providence has placed it to rule. The Government has the power—the Hon'ble the Home Member reminded us of it in very gentle and polite language, some other members had also reminded us of it—if the Government decide that a certain measure must be passed, they have the power to pass the measure in spite of the opposition of the representatives of the people. But, my Lord, I submit with great respect that it is not right of the Government to do so. At this era of the world's history, of the history of the British Empire at the end of a war where so much blood and treasure has been spent in fighting for righteousness and in defence of the liberties of nations, at the end of a war during which the principle has been repeatedly proclaimed that the only government entitled to be so called is a government where administration is carried on by the will of the people, it is a sorry spectacle that the Government of India should be legislating on an important matter like this in the teeth of the opposition of the representatives of the people

"My Lord, nobody can justly claim to be more interested in the welfare of the people of India than we Indians are. I do not quarrel with my official friends when they claim to be more concerned about the welfare of the masses of my countrymen than we imagine some of them are. We would be rejoiced if they have as much concern for the welfare of our people as we have. But will they allow us credit at least for common-sense and common honesty? Will they pause to think for a moment how it is that the various Indian members sitting in this Council, several of them men who have grown grey in the service of the country, who enjoy the esteem both of the people and of the Government why they all unite in offering opposition to the passage of this Bill? Will the Government pause to think if they are right in carrying this Bill, only by the official votes which they command in this Council? My Lord, they are not. And we apprehend that as the Government committed a great mistake in the case of the Bengal partition in carrying it out in the teeth of the protests of the people, so it is committing a similar mistake now, and we shudder to think of the estrangement of feelings between the people and the representatives of the Government which is likely to result from this attitude of the Government. It is useless it seems to hope that the Government will yet be restrained. I respectfully join with my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjee, in the appeal which he has made to your Excellency that though the Bill will be passed to-day, your Excellency may yet be pleased to withhold your assent from the same, until, at any rate I would add, until the time that the Bill and the papers connected with it and a full report of the debates of this Council have been laid before His Majesty's Secretary of State for India and His Majesty has signified his pleasure relating thereto."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"My Lord, I shall speak on the motion that the Bill should be passed into law. This is not a moment for anger, for bitter or harsh words or recrimination. It is a moment for sad, cool, calm, reflection. It is a question that each one of us should ask for himself as to why at a time when every one of us should be rejoicing over the victories of the Allies, at a time when every one of the Hon'ble Members here should be straining hard in the interests of their country to co-operate and appear to co-operate with the Government in every measure, at such a time there should be such hopeless discord, hopeless differences as have been exhibited during the discussions of the last few days. I take a standpoint somewhat different from that of some of my Hon'ble friends and colleagues here. I do not quarrel with the Government that they have not exercised their powers by way of Ordinance. I do not quarrel with the Government that they have not extended the period of the Defence of India Act; I do not complain that the Government has come here to ask us for permission to pass a law of this description. Nor do I ask the Government to stay their hand on the ground that there may be agitation in the country. I should not respect a Government which stays its hands solely and wholly because there may be some agitation in the country, if the Government feels that there is no escape but to face the agitation in a right and proper cause. I remember, my Lord, that my Hon'ble friend and colleague Mr. Sastri and myself were hissed and hooted when we opposed the passive resistance movement; but we braved that; and if we brave your anger or wrath or displeasure or misunderstanding of our motives, it is because we love the British connection even more dearly than you do, because it pays us to be part of the Empire much better than many of us realise. Well, then, if I do not ask the Government to stay its hand by reason of any agitation that can be threatened, what do I ask the Government to consider before it passes this Bill into law? I ask the Government to consider as to whether they are right, as to whether the whole people, the whole of their Indian colleagues here, of the loyalists outside, all their ex-judges, ex-members of council, are so egregiously wrong or likely to have so grossly blundered as to advise Government wrongly in a matter of this description. There may be a few disloyal men who would like to create agitation to embarrass the Government. I do not deny that. But Government should not give them opportunities, because it pays anarchists to create an agitation; an anarchist can only live by means of agitation; but let that pass. Are we to suppose that all these loyal supporters of the Government in and outside the Council are so unreasonable, have been so misled in their judgment as to advise Government in a particular way, when the Government feels that what they are doing is the right way? I cannot say as to whether any suggestions that have been thrown by my friend, Mr. Sastri, that there was something behind at the back of the Government's mind not disclosed to us here, frontier troubles, conspiracies of a kind that cannot be disclosed and the like, as to whether any suggestions of that kind could have moved the Government. I am not in a position to state that but I take it emphatically that there are none such because the Government at a time like this, when they have conquered Prussianism, and represent the mightiest nation in the world, is not likely to keep back from their own trusted advisers any movement of such a description. Well, then, I must proceed upon the materials which are available to Hon'ble Members and to the Government alike and consider that this Bill has been undertaken solely and wholly with a view to suppress what is understood by anarchical and revolutionary movements of the kind we have had in Bengal and elsewhere. The Rowlatt Committee report has been quoted often for the purpose of justifying the action of the Government, and many of us have said that we did not question many of the facts or findings of the Rowlatt Committee. But what are the facts which have been found by the Rowlatt Committee upon which the Government may act? The facts, as I take it, my Lord, are that there is a revolutionary movement which is hostile to the British Government, to the British connection, which is anti-British. That is the only finding they have arrived at. The rest are inferences which the Rowlatt Committee ask the Government to draw from certain facts. The Rowlatt Committee is of opinion that the judicial machinery has broken down in certain particular cases; we decline to accept that inference. Reading through the pages of the Rowlatt Committee's Report I respectfully suggest that the difficulties of the judges by reason of false evidence being placed before them has not been properly or sufficiently emphasised. Undue emphasis was laid on the fact that witnesses were terrorised. My recollection of the judgments, as I read them at the time they were passed, clearly convinced me that the Rowlatt Committee has not invited the attention of the Government in sufficiently clear and emphatic terms to the dangers that the people would be exposed to by tribunals acting upon the one-sided statements placed before them by the police, whether honestly or dishonestly, it is not necessary for us to discuss. It is because Messrs. Beachcroft and Chandravarkar came to the conclusion that most of those whose cases were placed before them deserved their fate that I hesitate to accept this motion or this Bill. If you place a one-sided version of a story before a judge or the Government the conclusion of any reasonable man must be the same unless he declines to act on such materials. It is because there is no provision in this Bill for the cross-examination or the sifting of such evidence as may be placed before the tribunals that we hold strongly to the conviction that the liberty of the subject is gravely menaced. I submit that the Government should pause and consider as to whether sufficient emphasis has been laid upon this weakness in the administration, and whether the evils have not been exaggerated with a view to arriving at certain findings. That is a point that I would respectfully submit to the attention of the Government before this Bill is passed into law. My Lord, there is one strong point of principle on which the members of this Council cannot see eye to eye with the Government, and it is this, we cannot allow the Government in a time of peace to confess that their ordinary machinery is so weak as to have broken down and that the judiciary must be displaced by the executive in order that an evil, however great it may be, may be coped with. That is a fundamental principle on which your Excellency's Government and we vitally differ.

"We cannot allow the executive government to say 'we are inefficient, we have been inefficient and, our police is inefficient, we have not been able to cope with a particular class of crime by the ordinary methods. Therefore, give us extreme powers though they might ~~un~~necessarily expose the subject to grave dangers in respect of his reputation, character, liberty and property.' That is a thing which I hope this Legislative Council and no future Legislative Council would allow the executive to do. There are several remedies, and these remedies must be tried and shown to have been tried before this application is made. The Government themselves have stated that they realise that other remedies should be applied. We thank the Government for the same and we feel that the reforms promised a year ago have been mainly responsible for the reduction of crime in various parts of India. We are confident that the application of remedial and reform measures alone will be a cure for these many evils. If they prove ineffectual, then is the time to come forward with any measures that may be considered necessary, but not now. My Lord, we are at a great disadvantage in many respects. The title of this Bill is that it is a Bill to cope with anarchical and revolutionary crime. One would be inclined to say 'what has come over them? why do Hon'ble Members not co-operate with the Government in crushing anarchical and revolutionary crimes?' If the Bill contained only sections embodying principles approved by jurisprudence, certainly your Lordship and the Government would be justified in reproaching us with having embarrassed and harassed you but what do we find, we turn to the pages of this Bill, I do not propose to weary the Council by describing at length the obnoxious provisions but to mention a few. It is in the power of the executive government to say what is a revolutionary movement, it is in the power of the executive government that is virtually its executive officers to say whether a man is concerned with a revolutionary or anarchical movement as they conceive it to be; the point whether an offence is connected with a revolutionary movement is not to be left to the courts but is to be decided by the executive. The investigating authority, as I have said, is to act on ex parte statements, the prosecution witnesses need not be produced, no opportunity need be given to the accused to defend himself, after knowing what the prosecution evidence is. Under Part III the Government has only to say that a man is connected with an offence and he stands branded with the infamy of having committed that offence, without a trial. The Government may release him if he is proved innocent, but the remedy of a civil suit is not open to him to show the world that he is an innocent man. The Government have acknowledged that it is only in one province that this particular crime exists, mainly Bengal. We have been told that the non-official members of that province have protested against the release of certain individuals; if the non-official members of that province have co-operated with the Government in that way, why should not this Bill for the safeguarding of the interests and lives of the subjects of Bengal be passed there, why bring it up here? I take exception to a remark that fell from the Hon'ble Sir Verney Lovett. He said that if anyone here had suffered at the hands of these revolutionaries less would have been said of these Bills being so black. I can only say that if a member, official or non-official, were to allow his personal suffering or inconvenience to warp his judgment to such an extent as to arrive at wrong conclusions in a matter of this kind, I should be sorry for him. I can understand clearly how officials sometimes engendered at the action of those said to be connected with anarchy lose their balance of mind and their judgment.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

"We do not know really what is passing in the minds of the official members of this Council, and it will be cruel on our part, wrong on our part, to say that they are acting in a way which we think is wrong. They are here to register their votes in a particular manner, and the Council has no right to judge of their views from their voting. It is the Government that has taken a particular attitude, and our remarks must be addressed to the judgment, the cool and dispassionate judgment of Government, with a view to convince it, if possible, that we are in the right and they are in the wrong.

"My Lord, it was said that Regulation III of 1818 is much more drastic than the present, and therefore it would be foolish to ask for an enforcement of that rather than of this Act. My Lord, Regulation III of 1818 can by executive action be modified in any way whatsoever the Government may think fit. Before taking action thereunder, Government themselves can appoint an investigating authority, there is nothing to prevent them from doing it, there is absolutely nothing in Regulation III which prevents the Government from consulting a judicial officer of a particular standing. There is absolutely nothing to prevent the executive government from proceeding under the existing laws in any manner they choose. They therefore cannot claim credit for having associated with themselves an administrative machinery in arriving at certain conclusions, especially when it is open to them to discard the judgment of the investigating authority. My Lord, our opposition to this Bill is based upon fundamental and vital principles recognised by all civilised Governments. If we were satisfied that this was the only way of suppressing anarchy or revolutionary crime, we should have willingly and cheerfully co-operated with the Government. But we feel that the circumstances do not warrant such a conclusion. I should prefer any day martial law to be proclaimed in any particular area if the country is in a disturbed state, because martial law invites the attention of the whole of India and of the rest of the world pointedly to the situation. But this police law, under a normal Statute enacted after due consultation in the Legislative Chamber is much more dangerous in its operation than the enforcement of martial law. My Lord, no circumstances have been proved to justify the action of Government in asking for such wide powers. Even if there were need as I have said, in times of peace it ought not to be open to the Government to ask for such powers supplanting and abrogating the ordinary judicial courts, forms and procedure. It is on these grounds that I base my opposition to this Bill."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma ; Sir Dinshaw Wacha.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

5-51 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha :—" My Lord, through all these protracted and wearisome proceedings I have been a silent listener, and as a silent listener, of course, I was on the side of my non-official friends. But I had no intention whatever to break that silence were it not for the urgent appeal of more than one friend that I should speak lest my views might remain concealed, and that my silence be misconstrued outside this hall. Under the circumstance, my Lord, I have risen to say only a few words, and I am not going to detain the Council for more than five minutes. I am neither an orator nor a consummate lawyer. I am only a humble student of practical politics, and as a practical politician, I am going to refer to two aspects of this present controversy. Those are in reference to the consequences which a large number of persons not only in this Council, but outside it—you may call them an enlightened intelligentsia—apprehend if the Bill comes to be passed. It is on those two aspects of the question that I want to speak (or rather this time to read my speech) and, I assure you, I will not take more than five minutes. As a matter of fact, there has been, of course, throughout these many days of the discussion what I call a conflict of views. The merits or demerits of the Bill from one side or the other have been threshed out at a wearisome length. They remind me of what years ago I read in Pope's 'Essay on Criticism.' 'It is with your judgment as with our watches. No two go alike, but each believes his own.' I should think, my Lord, that in the present case I realise the correctness of those lines, that each believes in his own judgment and considers that of his neighbour as all wrong, whatever that may be.

"I cordially endorse every word of the great speech which my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjee, delivered this morning with such fervid eloquence and with such burning patriotism. He has left nothing unsaid which I could have said in my own homely language, and I do not desire to detain the Council by repeating those words of sound political wisdom to which he gave expression. I had fain hoped that your Lordship's Government would have accepted the very reasonable amendment of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Banerjee. To me it is a matter of sincere regret that it was rejected. Had it been accepted, I have not the least doubt in my own mind that it would have proved of the greatest advantage to the Government and the public alike. The Government would have certainly been in a stronger position during the autumn Session to introduce the Bill without much ado. On the other hand, the public might have acquiesced in the opinion, one way or the other, which the highest judicial tribunals of the country might have expressed on the inadequacy or otherwise of the existing legislation to cope with anarchical and revolutionary movements. In a matter of this character, I venture to observe, my Lord, the Government should have been quick enough to attain the vision which might have enabled it to see the far-off with the clearness of the seer. The vitalising principle underlying the agitation on this Bill should never have been allowed to be ignored as it has unfortunately been ignored. The effect of ignoring it will, I am afraid, be mischievous in the future. It would be wisdom on the part of the Government to see that no action of theirs pours the poison of disloyalty in the arteries of our national life. For, it is superfluous to say that liberty alone preserves loyalty. But as the hope of liberty diminishes, the force of disloyalty grows.

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir Dinshaw Wacha ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"If, as I understand to do real justice to a people is the highest act of statesmanship, then your Excellency's Government had within its power to render justice in response to public opinion as expressed by the better mind of India. I am firmly of conviction that a strong Government like the Government of India stands in no need of a drastic enactment like the one which is just going to be passed into law, even for a brief period of three years. Nothing in my opinion, my Lord, is more dangerous than an arbitrary piece of legislation like this Bill under the insignia of freedom. It has been said here more than once that this Bill is a 'lawless law,' that it is a tyrannical piece of legislation. I do not endorse that opinion at all ; but I want to recall to the mind of those who have said it, that it was not A, B or C in this country who said it. It was Aristotle who said it 2,300 years ago. Then, again, Bacon has rightly reminded the shepherds of State, that is the rulers of a country, that 'the commandment of the will is greater than the commandment of force.' My Lord, I think I am correct in saying that the honours of a numerical majority belong to the Government, but the honours of arguments belong to the Non-Officials here, my Indian colleagues in the Council. Be that as it may, I heartily join my friend Mr. Banerjee in his appeal to your Lordship that you would do well to withhold your assent to this unpopular Bill, as the most exalted representative of His Majesty's Government.

"With these words I conclude my speech."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I have nothing more to add, my Lord."

6-4 P M

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" My Lord, I will not attempt to deal with all the questions that have been raised during the debate to-day. The Council is weary and the points have already been very fully discussed. But there are one or two matters to which I should like to draw attention. In the first place, it has been suggested, I think, by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma—I hope I do him no injustice—that the Government are wrong in acting against the wishes of the non-official Members, that they are wrong in refusing to yield to educated opinion as represented in this Council. Am I correct in this statement ? "

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I said that judgments differ and that the judgment of the non-official Members is correct and the judgment of the Government is wrong "

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" That is very nearly the same thing. This argument has been put higher on a previous occasion when it was suggested that Government were callously regardless of the Members of this Council and that they took a pride in flouting public opinion. My Lord, there is no foundation for that statement. The Members of your Excellency's Government are just as much human beings as any one else. They no more enjoy being made the targets for abuse by a virulent section of the press than anybody else. They no more delight in acrimonious discussions with various Members or in differing from those whom they are accustomed to look on as their friends than other people do. And I ask the Council to believe, therefore, that, if we act as we do, we do so from a conviction that the law that we propose is really necessary. I might retort of course that, if there is a danger in opposition to educated opinion there is an equal danger in allowing ill-informed criticism to influence one's opinion too much; that there is a great danger in allowing one's attitude towards a particular measure to be decided or to be swayed by the fear of unpopularity.

" My Lord, while I mention this point I do not wish to press the argument too far because I know that many Members of this Council do oppose this Bill from entirely different motives, as I tried to explain at the beginning of this debate.

" There was then a suggestion, I think, from the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri. I tried to take it down as it appeared to me to be a matter of some importance, and I should be very glad if he will correct me if I have made a mistake. The suggestion was that this Bill was not passed for the ostensible purpose for which it was proposed, but that it was a weapon for use against disorderly soldiers or a weapon for use against Mussulmans who might be distressed at the fate of Turkey, or that it was a weapon to crush any political discontent which might arise out of the present scheme of Reforms, which is not satisfactory. Finally, it was suggested that it might be a measure to enable the Government to crush political agitation when the new Reforms came into being. My Lord, there is no foundation whatever for any of these suggestions. We have no subtle plot, certainly not against soldiers—who have been fighting for us so well—certainly not against Muhammadans, many of whom, the great, great majority of whom, have helped us so much, and certainly not against the Reforms which we are now seeking to promote. The reasons for this Bill are set down quite honestly in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. The Bill is based purely on the Rowlatt Report, and, unless the Council supposes for one moment that the authors of that Report were actuated by motives of the character which have been suggested, then there is no basis whatever for believing that the Government is so either.

" In the course of the debate I have been criticised somewhat severely for referring to what I called the lack of a sense of civic responsibility. I think it was said that I thought fit to sermonise the Council. If I did so, I can only say it was not my intention. My desire was, both now and on previous occasions, in this Council and out of this Council, in legislation and in administration, to secure non-official co-operation and some Hon'ble Members of this Council, I believe, will bear me out in saying that this has been my object throughout these discussions. I still maintain that, if the Government can secure the co-operation of educated opinion in dealing with this crime, it will be a great asset. Much has been done, but much remains to be done, and it is really owing to a want of public spirit, a want of moral courage particularly in some parts of Bengal, that many of these criminals escape undetected and unconvicted though they are known to be guilty.

[Sir William Vincent ; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya went on to suggest that this Bill was a slur on India's loyalty. My Lord, I have explained repeatedly that this is not so, and I will not waste time by doing so again. My Lord, there are many here in this Council who have every right to speak of what India has done during the war, who have done much themselves, and whose provinces have responded nobly to the call of the Empire. There are times however when I cannot but think that those who are most criticised are not those who have done most. I remember the Hon'ble Pandit's attitude on the Defence of India Bill to my remarks to which he takes such exception. I was Secretary of the Council at the time and knew pretty well what was going on. I maintain that he opposed the Bill as far as ever he could and then, when he found that he could not secure support from the other Members of the Council, he nominally supported the principle of the Bill and introduced a very large number of amendments.

"Then, my Lord, what was the Hon'ble Member's attitude in regard to the 100 millions loan. As far as I remember—I was not in the Council at the time, but I have read the papers—he put in a Resolution against it which he subsequently, after speaking some time, withdrew. And why did he withdraw it? Because he could secure no support from Hon'ble Members of this Council.

"My Lord, what was the Hon'ble Member's attitude again on the 45 millions loan last September? Was that in accordance with the attitude of other Hon'ble Members? Was he not almost alone in opposing that loan? In these circumstances is it not somewhat idle, my Lord, for him to speak so much of what India has done? . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I rise to correct my Hon'ble friend. Five members of this Council voted against that loan."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"I am sorry if I did the Hon'ble Member an injustice in this matter. I had hoped he had voted on the other side. But, my Lord, this does not alter the facts as to Mr. Malaviya's attitude. If, however, my Lord, this Bill was in any way a slur on India's loyalty, if it was intended in any way to affect those who have helped us in the war, then I should have been the last person, as I have always said, to introduce it into this Council. It is not: It is aimed at revolutionaries.

"My Lord, I wish now to turn to a remark of Dr. Sapru's. He has spoken with great vigour against this Bill and with special force on particular provisions of it. I took the trouble to see what the Hon'ble Member had said during the last Session on the debate on the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde's Resolution on the subject of the report. I see from the Hon'ble Member's speech here the other day the Bill is everything that is evil; there is nothing too bad to be said about it; 'it is wholly wrong in principle, unsound in its inception, unfair in its operation, too sweeping,' and so forth. I thought the Hon'ble Member must have taken the same attitude then. But when I read the speech of the Hon'ble Member I found that all he then said was:—'As regards the recommendations, my Lord, I myself have considerable doubt as to the propriety or efficacy of some of these recommendations.' I maintain that there has been rather a change in the attitude of the Hon'ble Member from that day to this in regard to this Bill. He was then doubtful of some recommendations and he now condemns the whole Bill in unmeasured terms. Indeed, I may go a little further and say that both the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde and I have some cause for complaint in this matter. The Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde proposed in September that all action on the Rowlatt Committee's Report should be held in abeyance. No Member of this Council supported him. They all said 'Oh! no; we never heard of such a thing. Why should we support such a resolution?' Well, my Lord, the Government thought—it was a foolish mistake of theirs, they were quite mistaken in their appreciation of the attitude of the Council—they thought there were two courses open, either to take action on the Report or to hold the recommendations in abeyance; and, as the recommendations were not to be held in abeyance, according to this Council, we thought, as I say very foolishly, very stupidly, that the Council would, to some extent, support us in putting the recommendations into force.

[Sir William Vincent; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya; The President; Mr. V. J. Patel.] [18TH MARCH, 1919.]

"We were quite prepared of course for criticism on details and for very important modifications, but we did not think that we were going to run into a solid block of opposition of this kind. At the same time, I quite see that there are many reasons"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I state, my Lord, that the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde's Resolution was so worded as to make it impossible for us to vote on it. He asked 'that the consideration and disposal of the Report be kept in abeyance pending the institution of an inquiry into the Central Intelligence Department.' I am sorry that the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent has been so gravely misled."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I was only explaining that we had made a mistake. I was not in any way reproaching Hon'ble Members, but only regretting our mistake and explaining what we hoped would be the attitude of Council when we brought this Bill forward."

"I wish now, my Lord, to turn to a much more serious question, and that is, this question of passive resistance; and I should like, while I am speaking of it, to thank Hon'ble Members—those Hon'ble Members who have issued a manifesto against it—very much for their action in doing so, because I do believe that this passive resistance has in it great potentialities for evil. And it is the more to the credit of those Hon'ble Members who have issued this manifesto that they have done so in spite of the fact that they do not approve of the provisions of the Bill which is now before Council. It is a matter of great regret to us that a man of the selfless character of Mr. Gandhi should have embarked upon this movement. We can only earnestly hope that it will not materialise, because it is to be feared that though Mr. Gandhi may exercise the greatest self-restraint over his actions, other younger and more hot-headed men who join the movement may be led into violence which can but result in disaster. But, my Lord, whatever be the character of that movement, it is obvious that the Government cannot in any way yield to it. Indeed, any such conduct would be tantamount to a complete abrogation of the authority of the Governor General in Council."

"My Lord, I have now very nearly done. I have only a word or two to add. The conscience of the Government in the matter of this legislation is quite clear. We are acting from a deep-rooted conviction that we are doing what is right. We have proposed the law to meet what we know to be a terrible danger. We have provided numerous safeguards in it so as, as far as is possible, to prevent any injustice occurring under it. We think that many Members of this Council know in their heart of hearts what this danger is, and how formidable it is to peaceable residents in parts of the Province. My only regret is that I have failed to convince more Hon'ble Members of the necessity for this law, and this is a matter of greater regret because I feel it may be partly owing to some fault or deficiency in my presentation of the case."

G-20 P.M.

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"May I say a word, my Lord, regarding what the Hon'ble the Home Member has said about me?"

His Excellency the President:—"A personal explanation?"

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya:—"He was entitled to answer my arguments. He was not entitled to misrepresent me."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Your Excellency, before the motion is put, I object to the passing of this Bill at this meeting."

His Excellency the President:—"On what grounds?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—Under section 33 of the Rules of Business:

'If any amendment be made, any Member may object to the passing of the Bill at the same meeting; and such objection shall prevail unless the President, in exercise of his power to suspend any of these rules, allows the Bill to pass.'

[18TH MARCH, 1919.]

[Sir William Vincent; The President; Mr. V. J. Patel.]The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" May I suggest . . .His Excellency the President :—" I do not think the Hon'ble Member need take up the point. I carefully considered this question before I came to the Council to-day.

" Those amendments which were brought up to-day were amendments which were designed to carry out the wishes of the Council itself. The consequential amendments to the amendments which the Council passed at the last meeting. They were amendments which were all in the direction of the arguments which had been advanced by Hon'ble Members here; and therefore I do not think any surprise has been sprung on the Council by the fact that those amendments were allowed to be brought forward. I may say at once that I hope the Hon'ble Member does not think that I should have allowed the whole of this debate to take place, taking up an entire day, and then accept his suggestion that the day should be wasted and that we should proceed to have another discussion on this matter.

" No no, Mr. Patel."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Do I understand that your Excellency suspends the Rules of Business "His Excellency the President :—" I do "
